INTRODUCTION.

State of the Text.

THE TEMPEST is one of the plays that were never printed till in the folio of 1623; where, for reasons unknown to us, it stands the first in the division of Comedies, and the first in the volume, though it was undoubtedly among the latest of the Poet’s works.

The play is badly printed, considerably worse than most of the plays first printed in that volume; though not so badly as All’s Well that Ends Well, Timon of Athens, and Coriolanus. Besides many slighter errors, not very difficult of correction, it has a number of passages that are troublesome in the highest degree, and some that have hitherto baffled the most persevering and painstaking efforts to bring them into a satisfactory state; insomuch that they should, perhaps, be left untouched, as hopelessly incurable. Still I suppose it would hardly do to give up the cause on the plea that the resources of corrective art have here been exhausted: so I have, though without any great confidence of success, ventured to try my hand on several of them, and, after many years of careful study, have done the best I could with them. The details of the matter are, I believe, fully presented in the Critical Notes, and therefore need not be further enlarged upon here. It will be seen that I have adopted several new readings recently proposed by eminent contemporary Shakespeareans; and in these, as I can hardly have any self-partiality to warp my judgment, so I feel more confident as to the result.

Date of the Writing.

It has been ascertained beyond question that The Tempest was written at some time between the years 1603 and 1613. On the one hand, the leading features of Gonzalo's Commonwealth, as described in Act ii., Scene 1, were evidently taken from John Florio's translation of Montaigne, which was published in 1603. As the passage is curious in itself, and as it aptly illustrates the Poet's method of appropriating from others, I subjoin it together with the original:

Had I plantation of this isle, my lord,
And were the King on't, what would I do?
I' the commonwealth I would by contraries
Execute all things: for no kind of traffic
Would I admit; no name of magistrate;
Letters should not be known; riches, poverty,
And use of service, none; contract, succession,
Bourn, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none;
No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil;
No occupation; all men idle, all,
And women too, but innocent and pure;
No sovereignty:
All things in common Nature should produce
Without sweat or endeavour: treason, felony,
Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine,
Would I not have; but Nature should bring forth,
Of its own kind, all foison, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people.
I would with such perfection govern, sir,
T' excel the golden age.

In Montaigne's essay Of the Cannibals, as translated by Florio, we have the following: "Meseemeth that what in those nations we see by experience doth not only exceed all the pictures wherewith licentious Poesy hath proudly embellished the golden age, and all her quaint inventions to feign a happy condition of man; but also the conception and desire of Philosophy. It is a nation, would I answer Plato, that hath no kind of traffic, no knowledge of letters, no intelligence of numbers, no name of magistrate, nor of politic superiority; no use of service, of riches, or of poverty; no contracts, no successions, no dividences; no occupation, but idle; no respect of kindred, but common; no apparel but natural; no manuring of lands; no use of wine, corn, or metal: the very words that import lying, falsehood, treason, dissimulation, covetousness, envy, detraction, and pardon, were never heard amongst them."

Here the borrowing is too plain to be questioned; and this fixes the writing of The Tempest after 1603. On the other hand, Malone ascertained from some old records that the play was acted by the King's players "before Prince Charles, the Princess Elizabeth, and the Prince Palatine, in the beginning of 1613."

But the time of writing is to be gathered more nearly from another source. The play has several points clearly connecting with some of the then recent marvels of Transatlantic discovery: in fact, I suspect America may justly claim to have borne a considerable part in suggesting and shaping this delectable workmanship. In May, 1609, Sir George Somers, with a fleet of nine ships, headed by the Sea-Venture, which was called the Admiral's Ship, sailed for Virginia. In mid-ocean they were struck by a terrible tempest, which scattered the whole fleet; seven of the ships, however, reached Virginia; but the Sea-Venture was parted from the rest, driven out of her course, and finally wrecked on one of the Bermudas. These islands were then thought to be "a most prodigious and enchanted place, affording nothing but gusts, storms, and foul weather"; on which account they had acquired a bad name, as "an enchanted pile of rocks, and a desert inhabitation of devils."

In 1610 appeared a pamphlet entitled A Discovery of the Bermudas, otherwise called the Isle of Devils, giving an account of the storm and shipwreck. The sailors had worked themselves into complete exhaustion, had given over in despair, and taken leave of each other, when the ship was found to be jammed in between two rocks, so that all came safe to land. They found the island uninhabited, the air mild and wholesome, the land exceedingly fruitful; "all the fairies of the rocks were but flocks of birds, and all the devils that haunted the woods were but herds of swine." Staying there some nine months, they had a very delightful time of it, refitted their ship, and then put to sea again, with an ample supply of provisions, and their minds richly freighted with the beauties and wonders of the place.

There can be no rational doubt that from this narrative Shakespeare took various hints for the matter of his drama. Thus much is plainly indicated by his mention of "the still-vex'd Bermoothes," as the Bermudas were then called, and also by the qualities of air and soil ascribed to his happy island. So that 1610 is as early a date as can well be assigned for the composition. The supernatural in the play was no doubt the Poet's own creation; but it would have been in accordance with his usual method to avail himself of whatever interest might spring from the popular notions touching the Bermudas. In his marvellous creations the people would see nothing but the distant marvels with which their fancies were prepossessed.
INTRODUCTION.

Concurrent with all this is the internal evidence of the play itself. The style, language, and general cast of thought, the union of richness and severity, the grave, austere beauty of character which pervades it, and the organic compactness of the whole structure, all go to mark it as an issue of the Poet's ripest years. Coleridge regarded it as "certainly one of Shakespeare's latest works, judging from the language only." Campbell the poet considers it his very latest. "The Tempest," says he, "has a sort of sacredness as the last work of a mighty workman. Shakespeare, as if conscious that it would be his last, and as if inspired to typify himself, has made his hero a natural, a dignified, and benevolent magician, who could conjure up 'spirits from the vastly deep,' and command supernatural agency by the most seemingly-natural and simple means. Shakespeare himself is Prospero, or rather the superior genius who commands both Prospero and Ariel. But the time was approaching when the potent sorcerer was to break his staff, and bury it fathoms in the ocean 'deeper than did ever plummet sound.' That staff has never been and will never be recovered."

But I suspect there is more of poetry than of truth in this; at least I can find no warrant for it: on the contrary, we have fair ground for believing that at least Coriolanus, King Henry the Eighth, and perhaps The Winter's Tale were written after The Tempest. Verplanck, rather than give up the notion so well put by Campbell, suggests that the Poet may have revised The Tempest after all his other plays were written, and inserted the passage where Prospero abjures his "rough magic," and buries his staff, and drowns his book. But I can hardly think that Shakespeare had any reference to himself in that passage: for, besides that he did not use to put his own feelings and purposes into the mouth of his characters, the doing so in this case would infer such a degree of self-exultation as, it seems to me, his native and habitual modesty would scarce permit.

Source of the Plot.

Shakespeare was so unconscious of his great inventive faculty, so unambitious of originality in his plots and materials, and so apt to found his plays upon some popular chronicle or tale or romance, that he is generally, perhaps justly, presumed to have done so in this instance. Yet no play or novel has been identified as having furnished, in any sort, the basis of The Tempest, or any materials towards the composition. Commentators have been very diligent and inquisitive in the search; still, for aught appears thus far, the probability is, that, in this case, the plot had its origin in the Poet's mind. Collins the poet, indeed, told Thomas Warton that he had met with a novel called Aurelio and Isabella, dated 1588, and printed in Italian, Spanish, French, and English, upon which he thought The Tempest to have been founded: but poor Collins was at the time suffering under his mental disorder; and, as regards the particular novel he mentioned, his memory must have been at fault; for the story of Aurelio and Isabella has nothing in common with the play.

In the year 1841, however, Mr. Thoms called attention, in The New Monthly Magazine, to some remarkable coincidences between The Tempest and a German dramatic piece entitled The Beautiful Sidea, composed by Jacob Ayrer, who was a notary of Nuremberg, and contemporary with Shakespeare. In this piece, Prince Ludolph and Prince Leudegast answer to Prospero and Alonso. Ludolph is a magician, has an only daughter, Sidea, and an attendant spirit, Runcifal, who has some points of resemblance to Ariel. Soon after the opening of the piece, Ludolph, having been vanquished by his rival, and with his daughter driven into a forest, rebukes her for complaining of their change of fortune; and then summons his spirit Runcifal, in order to learn from him their future destiny, and their prospects of revenge. Runcifal, who, like Ariel, is somewhat "moody," announces to Ludolph that the son of his enemy will shortly become his prisoner. After a comic episode, Prince Leudegast, with his son Engelbrecht and the counsellors, is seen hunting in the same forest, when Engelbrecht and his companion Famulus, having separated from their associates, are suddenly encountered by Ludolph and his daughter. He commands them to yield themselves prisoners; they refuse, and attempt to draw their swords, when he renders them powerless by a touch of his magical wand, and gives Engelbrecht over to Sidea, to carry logs of wood for her, and to obey her in all things. Later in the piece, Sidea, moved with pity for the prince's labour in carrying logs, declares that she would "feel great joy, if he would prove faithful to me, and take me in wedlock"; an event which is at last happily brought to pass, and leads to a reconciliation of their parents.

Here the resemblances are evidently much too close to have been accidental: either the German must have borrowed from Shakespeare, or Shakespeare from the German, or both of them from some common source. Tieck gave it as his opinion that the German was derived from an English original now lost, to which Shakespeare was also indebted for the incidents of The Tempest. There the matter has to rest for the present. — There is, besides, an old ballad called The Inchanted Island, which was once thought to have contributed something towards the play: but it is now generally held to be more modern than the play, and probably founded upon it; the names and some of the incidents being varied, as if on purpose to disguise its connection with a work that was popular on the stage.

Locality of the Scene.

There has been considerable discussion as to the scene of The Tempest. A wide range of critics from Mr. Chalmers to Mrs. Jameson have taken for granted that the Poet fixed his scene in the Bermudas. For this they have alleged no authority but his mention of "the still-vex'd Bermoothes." Ariel's trip from "the deep nook to fetch dew from the still-vex'd Bermoothes" does indeed show that the Bermudas were in the Poet's mind; but then it also shows that his scene was not there; for it had been no feat at all worth mentioning for Ariel to fetch dew from one part of the Bermudas to another. An aerial voyage of some two or three thousand miles was the least that so nimble a messenger could be expected to make any account of. Besides, in less than an hour after the wrecking of the King's ship, the rest of the fleet are said to be upon the Mediterranean, "bound sadly home for Naples." On the other hand, the Rev. Mr. Hunter is very positive that, if we read the play with a map before us, we shall bring up at the island of Lampedusa, which "lies midway between Malta and the African coast." He makes out a pretty fair case, nevertheless I must be excused; not so much that I positively reject his theory as that I simply do not care whether it be true or not. But, if we must have any supposal about it, the most reasonable as well as the most poetical one seems to be, that the Poet, writing without a map, placed his scene upon an island of the mind; and that it suited his purpose to transfer to his ideal whereabout some of the wonders of Transatlantic discovery. I should almost as soon think of going to history for the characters of Ariel and Caliban, as to geography for the size, locality, or whatsoever else, of their dwelling-place. And it is to be noted that the old ballad just referred to seems to take for granted that the island was but an island of the mind; representing it to have disappeared upon Prospero’s leaving it:

From that day forth the isle has been
By wandering sailors never seen:
Some say ’tis buried deep
Beneath the sea, which breaks and roars
Above its savage rocky shores,
Nor e’er is known to sleep.

General Characteristics.

The Tempest is on all hands regarded as one of Shakespeare’s perfectest works. Some of his plays, I should say, have beams in their eyes; but this has hardly so much as a mote; or, if it have any motes, my own eyes are not clear enough to discern them. I dare not pronounce the work faultless, for this is too much to affirm of any human workmanship; but I venture to think that whatever faults it may have are such as criticism is hardly competent to specify. In the characters of Ariel, Miranda, and Caliban, we have three of the most unique and original conceptions that ever sprang from the wit of man. We can scarce imagine how the Ideal could be pushed further beyond Nature; yet we here find it clothed with all the truth and life of Nature. And the whole texture of incident and circumstance is framed in keeping with that Ideal; so that all the parts and particulars cohere together, mutually supporting and supported.
The leading sentiment naturally inspired by the scenes of this drama is, I believe, that of delighted wonder. And such, as appears from the heroine’s name, Miranda, who is the potency of the drama, is probably the sentiment which the play was meant to inspire. But the grace and efficacy in which the workmanship is steeped are so ethereal and so fine, that they can hardly be discoursed in any but the poetic form: it may well be doubted whether Criticism has any fingers delicate enough to grasp them. So much is this the case, that it seemed to me quite doubtful whether I should do well to undertake the theme at all. For Criticism is necessarily obliged to substitute, more or less, the forms of logic for those of art; and art, it scarce need be said, can do many things that are altogether beyond the reach of logic. On the other hand, the charm and verdure of these scenes are so unwithering and inexhaustible, that I could not quite make up my mind to leave the subject untried. Nor do I know how I can better serve my countrymen than by engaging and helping them in the study of this great inheritance of natural wisdom and unreproved delight. For, assuredly, if they early learn to be at home and to take pleasure in Shakespeare’s workmanship, their whole after-life will be the better and the happier for it.

Coleridge says “The Tempest is a specimen of the purely romantic drama.” The term romantic is here used in a technical sense; that is, to distinguish the Shakespearian from the Classic Drama. In this sense, I cannot quite agree with the great critic that the drama is purely romantic. Highly romantic it certainly is, in its wide, free, bold variety of character and incident, and in all the qualities that enter into the picturesque; yet not romantic in such sort, I think, but that it is at the same time equally classic; classic, not only in that the unities of time and place are strictly observed, but as having the other qualities which naturally go with those laws of the classic form; in its severe beauty and majestic simplicity, its interfusion of the lyrical and ethical, and in the mellow atmosphere of serenity and composure which envelopes it: as if on purpose to show the Poet’s mastery not only of both the Classic and Romantic Drama, but of the common Nature out of which both of them grew. This union of both kinds in one without hindrance to the distinctive qualities of either,—this it is, I think, that chiefly distinguishes The Tempest from the Poet’s other dramas. Some have thought that in this play Shakespeare specially undertook to silence the pedantic cavillers of his time by showing that he could keep to the rules of the Greek stage, if he chose to do so, without being any the less himself. But it seems more likely that he was here drawn into such a course by the leading of his own wise spirit than by the cavils of contemporary critics; the form appearing too cognate with the matter to have been dictated by any thing external to the work itself.

There are some points that naturally suggest a comparison between The Tempest and A Midsummer-Night’s Dream. In both the Poet has with equal or nearly equal success carried Nature, as it were, beyond herself, and peopled a purely ideal region with the attributes of life and reality; so that the characters touch us like substantive, personal beings, as if he had but described, not created them. But, beyond this, the resemblance ceases: indeed no two of his plays differ more widely in all other respects.

The Tempest presents a combination of elements apparently so incongruous that we cannot but marvel how they were brought together; yet they blend so sweetly, and cooperate so smoothly, that we at once feel at home with them, and see nothing to hinder their union in the world of which we are a part. For in the mingling of the natural and the supernatural we here find no gap, no break; nothing disjointed or abrupt; the two being drawn into each other so harmoniously, and so knit together by mutual participations, that they seem strictly continuous, with no distinguishable line to mark where they meet and join. It is as if the gulf which apparently separates the two worlds had been abolished, leaving nothing to prevent a free circulation and intercourse between them.

The Hero.

Prospero, standing in the centre of the whole, acts as a kind of subordinate Providence, reconciling the diverse elements to himself and in himself to one another. Though armed with supernatural might, so that the winds and waves obey him, his magical and mysterious powers are tied to truth and right: his "high charms work" to none but just and beneficent ends; and whatever might be repulsive in the magician is softened and made attractive by the virtues of the man and the feelings of the father: Ariel links him with the world above us, Caliban with the world beneath us, and Miranda—"thee, my dear one, thee my daughter"—with the world around and within us. And the mind acquiesces freely in the miracles ascribed to him; his thoughts and aims being so at one with Nature's inward harmonies, that we cannot tell whether he shapes her movements or merely falls in with them; that is, whether his art stands in submission or command. His sorcery indeed is the sorcery of knowledge, his magic the magic of virtue. For what so marvellous as the inward, vital necromancy of good which transmutes the wrongs that are done him into motives of beneficence, and is so far from being hurt by the powers of Evil, that it turns their assaults into new sources of strength against them? And with what a smooth tranquillity of spirit he everywhere speaks and acts! as if the discipline of adversity had but served

\text{to elevate the will,} \\
\text{And lead him on to that transcendent rest} \\
\text{Where every passion doth the sway attest} \\
\text{Of Reason seated on her sovereign hill.}

Shakespeare and Bacon, the Prince of poets and the Prince of philosophers, wrought out their mighty works side by side, and nearly at the same time, though without any express recognition of each other. And why may we not regard Prospero as prognosticating in a poetical form those vast triumphs of man’s rational spirit which the philosopher foresaw and prepared? For it is observable that, before Prospero’s coming to the island, the powers which cleave to his thoughts and obey his “so potent art” were at perpetual war, the better being in subjection to the worse, and all being turned from their rightful ends into a mad, brawling dissonance: but he teaches them to know their places; and, “weak masters though they be,” without such guidance, yet under his ordering they become powerful, and work together as if endowed with a rational soul and a social purpose; their insane gabble turning to speech, their savage howling to music; so that

\text{the isle is full of noises,} \\
\text{Sounds, and sweet airs, that give delight, and hurt not.}

Wherein is boldly figured the educating of Nature up, so to speak, into intelligent ministries, she lending man hands because he lends her eyes, and weaving her forces into vital union with him.
You by whose aid—
Weak masters though ye be—I have bedimm'd
The noontide Sun, call'd forth the mutinous winds,
And 'twixt the green sea and the azure vault
Set roaring war: to the dread-rattling thunder
Have I given fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak
With his own bolt: the strong-based promontory
Have I made shake; and by the spurs pluck'd up
The pine and cedar.

In this bold imagery we seem to have a kind of prophecy of what human science and skill have since achieved in taming the great forces of Nature to man's hand, and harnessing them into his service. Is not all this as if the infernal powers should be appeased and soothed by the melody and sweetness of the Orphean harp and voice? And do we not see how the very elements themselves grow happy and merry in serving man, when he by his wisdom and eloquence has once charmed them into order and concert? Man has but to learn Nature's language and obey her voice, and she clothes him with plenipotence. The mad warring of her forces turns to rational speech and music when he holds the torch of reason before them and makes it shine full in their faces. Let him but set himself steadfastly to understand and observe her laws, and her mighty energies hasten to wait upon him, as docile to his hand as the lion to the eye and voice of Lady Una. So that we may not unfairly apply to Prospero what Bacon so finely interprets of Orpheus, as "a wonderful and divine person skilled in all kinds of harmony, subduing and drawing all things after him by sweet and gentle methods and modulations."

All this, to be sure, is making the work rather an allegory than a drama, and therein of course misrepresents its quality. For the connecting links in this strange intercourse of man and Nature are "beings individually determined," and affect us as persons, not as propositions.

Prospero's Prime Minister.

Ariel and Caliban are equally preternatural, though in opposite directions. Ariel's very being is spun out of melody and fragrance; at least, if a feeling soul and an intelligent will are the warp, these are the woof of his exquisite texture. He has just enough of human-heartedness to know how he would feel were he human, and a proportionable sense of gratitude, which has been aptly called "the memory of the heart": hence he needs to be often reminded of his obligations, but is religiously true to them so long as he remembers them. His delicacy of nature is nowhere more apparent than in his sympathy with right and good: the instant he comes within their touch he follows them without reserve; and he will suffer any torments rather than "act the earthy and abhor'd commands" that go against his moral grain. And what a merry little personage he is withal! as if his being were cast together in an impulse of play, and he would spend his whole life in one perpetual frolic.

But the main ingredients of Ariel's zephyr-like constitution are shown in his leading inclinations; as he naturally has most affinity for that of which he is framed. Moral ties are irksome to him; they are not his proper element: when he enters their sphere, he feels them to be holy indeed; but, were he free, he would keep out of their reach, and follow the circling seasons in their course, and always dwell merrily in the fringes of Summer. Prospero quietly intimates his instinctive dread of the cold by threatening to make him "howl away twelve Winters." And the chief joy of his promised release from service is, that he will then be free to live all the year through under the soft rule of Summer, with its flowers and fragrances and melodies. He is indeed an arrant little epicure of perfume and sweet sounds, and gives forth several songs which "seem to sound in the air, and as if the person playing them were invisible."

A part of Ariel's unique texture is well shown in the scene where he relents at the sufferings of the shipwrecked lords, and remonstrates with his master in their behalf:

_Ariel._ The King,
His brother, and yours, abide all three distracted;
And the remainder mourning over them,
Brimful of sorrow and dismay; but chiefly
He that you term'd _the good old lord, Gonzalo:_
His tears run down his beard, like winter-drops
From eaves of reeds. Your charm so strongly works 'em,
That, if you now beheld them, your affections
Would become tender.

_Procis._ Dost thou think so, spirit?
_Ariel._ Mine would, sir, were I human.

Another mark-worthy feature of Ariel is, that his power does not stop with the physical forces of Nature, but reaches also to the hearts and consciences of men; so that by his music he can kindle or assuage the deepest griefs of the one, and strike the keenest pangs of remorse into the other. This comes out in the different effects of his art upon Ferdinand and the guilty King, as related by the men themselves:

Where should this music be? i' the air or th' earth?
It sounds no more: and, sure, it waits upon
Some god o' the island. Sitting on a bank,
Weeping again the King my father's wreck,
This music crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury and my passion
With its sweet air: thence I have follow'd it,
Or it hath drawn me rather: but 'tis gone.
No, it begins again.
Such is the effect on Ferdinand: now mark the contrast when we come to the King:—

O, it is monstrous, monstrous!
Methought the billows spoke, and told me of it;
The winds did sing it to me; and the thunder,
That deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pronounced
The name of Prosper: it did bass my trespass.
Therefore my son i' the ooze is bedded; and
I'll seek him deeper than e'er plummet sounded,
And with him there lie muddied.

In the planting of love, too, Ariel beats old god Cupid all to nothing. For it is through some witchcraft of his that Ferdinand and Miranda are surprised into a mutual rapture; so that Prospero notes at once how "at the first sight they have changed eyes," and "are both in either's power." All which is indeed just what Prospero wanted; yet he is himself fairly startled at the result: that fine issue of nature out-runs his thought; and the wise old gentleman takes care forthwith lest it work too fast:—

This swift business
I must uneasy make, lest too light winning
Make the prize light.

I must note one more trait in Ariel. It is his fondness of mischievous sport, wherein he reminds us somewhat of Fairy Puck in A Midsummer-Night's Dream. It is shown in the evident gust with which he relates the trick he has played on Caliban and his confederates, when they were proceeding to execute their conspiracy against the hero's life:—

As I told you, sir, they were red-hot with drinking;
So full of valour, that they smote the air
For breathing in their faces; beat the ground
For kissing of their feet; yet always bending
Towards their project. Then I beat my tabor;
At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanced their eyelids, lifted up their noses
As they smelt music: so I charm'd their ears,
That, calf-like, they my lowing follow'd through Tooth'd briers, sharp furzes, pricking goss, and thorns,
Which enter'd their frail shins: at last I left them
I' the filthy-mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to th' chins.

Of Ariel's powers and functions as Prospero's prime minister, no logical forms, nothing but the Poet's art, can give any sort of an idea. No painter, I am sure, can do any thing with him; still less can any sculptor. Gifted with the ubiquity and multiformity of the substance from which he is named, before we can catch and define him in any one shape, he has passed into another. All we can say of him on this score is, that through his agency Prospero's thoughts forthwith become things, his volitions events. And yet, strangely and diversely as Ariel's nature is elemented and composed, with touches akin to several orders of being, there is such a self-consistency about him, he is so cut out in individual distinctness, and so rounded-in with personal attributes, that contemplation freely and easily rests upon him as an object. In other words, he is by no means an abstract idea personified, or any sort of intellectual diagram, but a veritable person; and we have a personal feeling towards the dear creature, and would fain knit him into the living circle of our human affections, making him a familiar playfellow of the heart, to be cherished with "praise, blame, love, kisses, tears, and smiles."

Caliban.

If Caliban strikes us as a more wonderful creation than Ariel, it is probably because he has more in common with us, without being in any proper sense human. Perhaps I cannot hit him off better than by saying that he represents, both in body and soul, a sort of intermediate nature between man and brute, with an infusion of something that belongs to neither; as though one of the transformations imagined by the evolutionists had stuck midway in its course, where a breath or vapour of essential Evil had knit itself vitally into his texture. Caliban has all the attributes of humanity from the moral downwards, so that his nature touches and borders upon the sphere of moral life: still the result but approves his exclusion from such life, in that it brings him to recognize moral law only as making for self; that is, he has intelligence of seeming wrong in what is done to him, but no conscience of what is wrong in his own doings. It is a most singular and significant stroke in the delineation, that sleep seems to loosen the fetters of his soul, and lift him above himself: then indeed, and then only, “the muddy vesture of decay” doth not so “grossly close him in,” but that some proper spirit-notices come upon him; as if in his passive state the voice of truth and good vibrated down to his soul, and stopped there, being unable to kindle any answering tones within: so that in his waking hours they are to him but as the memory of a dream.

Sometime a thousand twangling instruments
Will hum about mine ears; and sometime voices,
That, if I then had waked after long sleep,
Will make me sleep again: and then, in dreaming,
The clouds methought would open, and show riches
Ready to drop upon me; that, when I waked,
I cried to dream again.

Thus Caliban is part man, part demon, part brute, each being drawn somewhat out of itself by combination with the others, and the union of all preventing him from being either; for which cause language has no generic term that fits him. Yet this strange, uncouth, but life-like confusion of natures Prospero has educated into a sort of poet. This, however, has nowise tamed, it has rather increased, his innate malignity and crookedness of disposition; education having of course but educated what was in him. Even his poetry is, for the most part, made up of the fascinations of ugliness; a sort of inverted beauty; the poetry of dissonance and deformity; the proper music of his nature being to curse, its proper laughter to snarl. Schlegel finely compares his mind to a dark cave, into which the light of knowledge falling neither illuminates nor warms it, but only serves to put in motion the poisonous vapours generated there.

Now it is by exhausting the resources of instruction on such a being that his innate and essential deficiency is best shown. For, had he the germs of a human soul, they must needs have been drawn forth by the process that has made him a poet. The magical presence of spirits has indeed cast into the caverns of his brain some faint reflection of a better world, but without calling up any answering emotions or aspirations; he having no susceptibilities to catch and take in the epiphanies that throng his whereabout. So that, paradoxical as it may seem, he exemplifies the two-fold triumph of art over nature, and of nature over art; that is, art has triumphed in making him a poet, and nature, in still keeping him from being a man; though he has enough of the human in him to evince in a high degree the swelling of intellectual pride.

But what is most remarkable of all in Caliban is the perfect originality of his thoughts and manners. Though framed of grossness and malignity, there is nothing vulgar or commonplace about him. His whole character indeed is developed from within, not impressed from without; the effect of Prospero's instructions having been to make him all the more himself; and there being perhaps no soil in his nature for conventional vices and knaveries to take root and grow in. Hence the almost classic dignity of his behaviour compared with that of the drunken sailors, who are little else than a sort of low, vulgar conventionalities organized, and as such not less true to the life than consistent with themselves. In his simplicity, indeed, he at first mistakes them for gods who "bear celestial liquor," and they wax merry enough at the "credulous monster"; but, in his vigour of thought and purpose, he soon conceives such a scorn of their childish interest in whatever trinkets and gewgaws meet their eye, as fairly drives off his fit of intoxication; and the savage of the woods, half-human though he be, seems nobility itself beside the savages of the city.

In fine, if Caliban is, so to speak, the organized sediment and dregs of the place, from which all the finer spirit has been drawn off to fashion the delicate Ariel, yet having some parts of a human mind strangely interwoven with his structure; every thing about him, all that he does and says, is suitable and correspondent to such a constitution of nature. So that all the elements and attributes of his being stand and work together in living coherence, thus rendering him no less substantive and personal to our apprehension than he is original and peculiar in himself.

The Heroine.

Such are the objects and influences amidst which the clear, placid nature of Miranda has been developed. Of the world whence her father was driven, its crimes and follies and sufferings, she knows nothing; he having studiously kept all such notices from her, to the end, apparently, that nothing might thwart or hinder the plastic efficacies that surrounded her. And here all the simple and original elements of her being, love, light, grace, honour, innocence, all pure feelings and tender sympathies, whatever is sweet and gentle and holy in womanhood, seem to have sprung up in her nature as from celestial seed: "the contagion of the world's slow stain" has not visited her; the chills and cankers of artificial wisdom have not touched nor come nigh her: if there were any fog or breath of evil in the place that might else dim or spot her soul, it has been sponged up by Caliban, as being more congenial with his nature; while he is simply "a villain she does not love to look on." Nor is this all.

The aerial music beneath which her nature has expanded with answering sweetness seems to rest visibly upon her, linking her as it were with some superior order of beings: the spirit and genius of the place, its magic and mystery, have breathed their power into her face; and out of them she has unconsciously woven herself a robe of supernatural grace, in which even her mortal nature seems half hidden, so that we are in doubt whether she belongs more to Heaven or to Earth. Thus both her native virtues and the efficacies of the place seem to have crept and stolen into her unperceived, by mutual attraction and assimilation twining together in one growth, and each diffusing its life and beauty over and through the others. It would seem indeed as if Wordsworth must have had Miranda in his eye, (or was he but working in the spirit of that Nature which she so rarely exemplifies?) when he wrote the following:—

The floating clouds their state shall lend
To her; for her the willow bend;
Nor shall she fail to see
Even in the motions of the storm
Grace that shall mould the maiden's form
By silent sympathy.

The stars of midnight shall be dear
To her; and she shall lean her ear
In many a secret place
Where rivulets dance their wayward round,
And beauty born of murmuring sound
Shall pass into her face.

Yet, for all this, Miranda not a whit the less touches us as a creature of flesh and blood,—

A being breathing thoughtful breath,
A traveller between life and death.

Nay, rather she seems all the more so, inasmuch as the character thus coheres with the circumstances, the virtues and poetries of the place being expressed in her visibly; and she would be far less real to our feelings, were not the wonders of her whereabout thus vitally incorporated with her innate and original attributes.

It is observable that Miranda does not perceive the working of her father's art upon herself. For, when he casts a spell of drowsiness over her, so that she cannot choose but sleep, on being awaked by him she tells him, "The strangeness of your story put heaviness in me." So his art conceals itself in its very potency of operation; and seems the more like nature for being preternatural. It is another noteworthy point, that while he is telling his strange tale he thinks she is not listening attentively to his speech, partly because he is not attending to it himself, his thoughts being busy with the approaching crisis of his fortune, and drawn away to the other matters which he has in hand, and partly because in her trance of wonder at what he is relating she seems abstracted and self-withdrawn from the matter of his discourse,
His own absent-mindedness on this occasion is aptly and artfully indicated by his broken and disjointed manner of speech. That his tongue and thought are not beating time together appears in that the latter end of his sentences keeps forgetting the beginning.

These are among the fine strokes and delicate touches whereby the Poet makes, or rather permits, the character of his persons to transpire so quietly as not to excite special notice at the time. That Miranda should be so rapt at her father's tale as to seem absent and wandering, is a charming instance in point. For indeed to her the supernatural stands in the place of Nature; and nothing is so strange and wonderful as what actually passes in the life and heart of man: miracles have been her daily food, her father being the greatest miracle of all; which must needs make the common events and passions and perturbations of the world seem to her miraculous. All which is wrought out by the Poet with so much art and so little appearance of art, that Franz Horn is the only critic, so far as I know, that seems to have thought of it.

I must not dismiss Miranda without remarking the sweet union of womanly dignity and childlike simplicity in her character, she not knowing or not caring to disguise the innocent movements of her heart. This, too, is a natural result of her situation. The instance to which I refer is when Ferdinand, his manhood all alive with her, lets her hear his soul speak; and she, weeping at what she is glad of, replies,—

Hence, bashful cunning!
And prompt me, plain and holy innocence!—
I am your wife, if you will marry me:
If not, I'll die your maid: to be your fellow
You may deny me; but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.
Equally fine is the circumstance that her father opens to her the story of his life, and lets her into the secret of her noble birth and ancestry, at a time when she is suffering with those that she saw suffer, and when her eyes are jewelled with "drops that sacred pity hath engender'd"; as if on purpose that the ideas of rank and dignity may sweetly blend and coalesce in her mind with the sympathies of the woman.

The Prince.

In Ferdinand is portrayed one of those happy natures, such as we sometimes meet with, who are built up all the more strongly in truth and good by contact with the vices and meannesses of the world. Courage, piety, and honour are his leading characteristics; and these virtues are so much at home in his breast, and have such an easy, natural ascendant in his conduct, that he thinks not of them, and cares only to prevent or remove the stains which affront his inward eye. The meeting of him and Miranda is replete with magic indeed,—a magic higher and more potent even than Prospero's; the riches that nestle in their bosoms at once leaping forth and running together in a stream of poetry which no words of mine can describe. So much of beauty in so few words, and those few so plain and simple,—"O, wondrous skill and sweet wit of the man!"

Shakespeare's genius is specially venerable in that he makes piety and honour go hand in hand with love. It seems to have been a fixed principle with him, if indeed it was not rather a genial instinct, that where the heart is rightly engaged, there the highest and tenderest thoughts of religion do naturally cluster and converge. For indeed the love that looks to marriage is itself a religion: its first impulse is to invest its object with poetry and consecration: to be "true to the kindred points of Heaven and home," is both its inspiration and its law. It thus involves a sort of regeneration of the inner man, and carries in its hand the baptismal fire of a nobler and diviner life.

And so it is in this delectable instance. In Ferdinand, as in all generous natures, "love betters what is best." Its first springing in his breast stirs his heavenward thoughts and aspirations into exercise: the moment that kindles his heart towards Miranda also kindles his soul in piety to God; and he knows not how to commune in prayer with the Source of good, unless he may couple her welfare with his own, and breathe her name in his holiest service. Thus his love and piety are kindred and coefficient forces, as indeed all true love and piety essentially are. However thoughtless we may be of the Divine help and guardianship for ourselves, we can hardly choose but crave them for those to whom our souls are knit in the sacred dearness of household ties. And so with this noble pair, the same power that binds them to each other in the sacraments of love also binds them both in devout allegiance to the Author of their being; whose presence is most felt by them in the sacredness of their mutual truth.

So much for the illustration here so sweetly given of the old principle, that whatsoever lies nearest a Christian's heart, whatsoever he tenders most dearly on Earth, whatsoever draws in most intimately with the currents of his soul, that is the spontaneous subject-matter of his prayers; our purest loves thus sending us to God, as if from an instinctive feeling that, unless God be sanctified in our hearts, our hearts cannot retain their proper life.

In regard to what springs up between Ferdinand and Miranda, it is to be noted that Prospero does little but furnish occasions. He indeed thanks the quaint and delicate Ariel for the kindling touch that so quickly puts them “both in either’s power”; for it seems to him the result of a finer inspiration than his art can reach; and so he naturally attributes it to the magic of his airy minister; whereas in truth it springs from a source far deeper than the magic of either, — a pre-established harmony which the mutual recognition now first quickens into audible music. After seeing himself thus outdone by the Nature he has been wont to control, and having witnessed such a “fair encounter of two most rare affections,” no wonder that Prospero longs to be a man again, like other men, and gladly returns to

Antonio, Sebastian, and Gonzalo.

The strength and delicacy of imagination displayed in the characters already noticed are hardly more admirable than the truth and subtilty of observation shown in others.

In the delineation of Antonio and Sebastian, short as it is, we have a volume of wise science, which Coleridge remarks upon thus: “In the first scene of the second Act, Shakespeare has shown the tendency in bad men to indulge in scorn and contemptuous expressions, as a mode of getting rid of their own uneasy feelings of inferiority to the good, and also of rendering the transition of others to wickedness easy, by making the good ridiculous. Shakespeare never puts habitual scorn into the mouths of other than bad men, as here in the instance of Antonio and Sebastian.”

Nor is there less of judgment in the means used by Prospero for bringing them to a better mind; provoking in them the purpose of crime, and then taking away the performance; that so he may lead them to a knowledge of themselves, and awe or shame down their evil by his demonstrations of good. For such is the proper effect of bad designs thus thwarted, showing the authors at once the wickedness of their hearts and the weakness of their hands; whereas, if successful in their schemes, pride of power would forestall and prevent the natural shame and remorse of guilt. And we little know what evil it lieth and lurketh in our hearts to will or to do, till occasion invites or permits; and Prospero's art here stands in presenting the occasion till the wicked purpose is formed, and then removing it as soon as the hand is raised. In the case of Antonio and Sebastian, the workings of magic are so mixed up with those of Nature, that we cannot distinguish them; or rather Prospero here causes the supernatural to pursue the methods of Nature.

And the same deep skill is shown in the case of the good old Lord Gonzalo, whose sense of his own infelicities seems lost in his care to minister comfort and diversion to others. Thus his virtue spontaneously opens the springs of wit and humour in him amid the terrors of the storm and shipwreck; and he is merry while others are suffering, and merry even from sympathy with them; and afterwards his thoughtful spirit plays with Utopian fancies; and if "the latter end of his Commonwealth forgets the beginning," it is all the same to him, his purpose being only to beguile the anguish of supposed bereavement. It has been well said that "Gonzalo is so occupied with duty, in which alone he finds pleasure, that he scarce notices the gnat-stings of wit with which his opponents pursue him; or, if he observes, firmly and easily repels them."
INTRODUCTION.

The Comic Matter.

The comic portions and characters of this play are in Shakespeare's raciest vein; yet they are perfectly unique and singular withal, being quite unlike any other of his preparations in that kind, as much so as if they were the growth of a different planet.

The presence of Trinculo and Stephano in the play has sometimes been regarded as a blemish. I cannot think it so. Their part is not only good in itself as comedy, but is in admirable keeping with the rest. Their follies give a zest and relish to the high poetries amidst which they grow. Such things go to make up the mysterious whole of human life; and they often help on our pleasure while seeming to hinder it; we may think they were better left out, but, were they left out, we should somehow feel the want of them. Besides, this part of the work, if it does not directly yield a grateful fragrance, is vitally connected with the parts that do. For there is perhaps no one of the Poet's dramas of which it can be more justly affirmed that all the parts draw together in organic unity, so that every thing helps every other thing.

Concluding Remarks.

Such are the strangely-assorted characters that make up this charming play. This harmonious working together of diverse and opposite elements,—this smooth concurrence of heterogeneous materials in one varied yet coherent impression,—by what subtile process this is brought about, is perhaps too deep a problem for Criticism to solve.

I cannot leave the theme without remarking what an atmosphere of wonder and mystery overhangs and pervades this singular structure; and how the whole seems steeped in glories invisible to the natural eye, yet made visible by the Poet's art: so that the effect is to lead the thoughts insensibly upwards to other worlds and other forms of being. It were difficult to name any thing else of human workmanship so thoroughly transfigured with the gleam,

The light that never was on sea or land,
The consecration and the poet's dream.

The celestial and the earthly are here so commingled,—commingled, but not confounded,—that we see not where the one begins or the other ends: so that in the reading we seem transported to a region where we are strangers, yet old acquaintances; where all things are at once new and familiar; the unearthly visions of the spot hardly touching us with surprise, because, though wonderful indeed, there is nothing about them but what readily finds or creates some answering powers and sympathies within us. In other words, they do not surprise us, because they at once kindle us into fellowship with them. That our thoughts and feelings are thus at home with such things, and take pleasure in them,—is not this because of some innate aptitudes and affinities of our nature for a supernatural and celestial life?

Point not these mysteries to an art
Lodged above the starry pole?

Professor Dowden's Comments.

The wrong-doers of The Tempest are a group of persons of various degrees of criminality, from Prospero's perfidious brother, still active in plotting evil, to Alonso, whose obligations to the Duke of Milan had been of a public or princely kind. Spiritual powers are in alliance with Prospero; and these, by terror and the awakening of remorse, prepare Alonso for receiving the balm of Prospero’s forgiveness. He looks upon his son as lost, and recognizes in his son’s loss the punishment of his own guilt. “The powers delaying, not forgetting,” have incensed the sea and shores against the sinful men; nothing can deliver them except “heart-sorrow, and a clear life ensuing.” Goethe, in the opening of the Second Part of Faust, has represented the ministry of external nature fulfilling functions with reference to the human conscience precisely the reverse of those ascribed to it in The Tempest. Faust, escaped from the prison-scene and the madness of Margarete, is lying on a flowery grass-plot, weary, restless, striving to sleep. The Ariel of Goethe calls upon his attendant elvish spirits to prepare the soul of Faust for renewed energy by bathing him in the dew of Lethe’s stream, by assuaging his pain, by driving back remorse. To dismiss from his conscience the sense of the wrong he has done to a dead woman, is the initial step in the further education and development of Faust. Shakespeare’s Ariel, breathing through the elements and the powers of Nature, quickens the remorse of the King for a crime of twelve years since.

The enemies of Prospero are now completely in his power. How shall he deal with them? They had perfidiously taken advantage of his unworldly and unpractical habits of life; they had thrust him away from his dukedom; they had exposed him with his three-years’-old daughter in a rotten boat to the mercy of the waves. Shall he not now avenge himself without remorse? What is Prospero’s decision?

Though with their high wrongs I am struck to th’ quick,
Yet with my nobler reason ’gainst my fury
Do I take part: the rarer action is
In virtue than in vengeance: they being penitent,
The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a frown further.
We have seen how Timon turned fiercely upon mankind, and hated the wicked race: "I am Misanthropos, and hate mankind." The wrongs inflicted upon Prospero were crueller and more base than those from which Timon suffered. But Prospero had not lived in a summer mood of lax and prodigal benevolence: he had lived severely, "all dedicated to closeness and the bettering of my mind." And out of the strong comes forth sweetness. In the play of Cymbeline, the wrong which Posthumus has suffered from the Italian Iachimo is only less than that which Othello endures at the hands of Iago. But Iachimo, unlike Iago, is unable to sustain the burden of his guilt, and sinks under it. In the closing scene of Cymbeline, that in which Posthumus is himself welcomed home to the heart of Imogen, Posthumus in his turn becomes the pardoner:

Kneel not to me:
The power that I have on you is to spare you;
The malice toward you to forgive you: live,
And deal with others better.

Hermione, Imogen, Prospero,—these are, as it were, names for the gracious powers which extend forgiveness to men. From the first, Hermione, whose clear-sightedness is equal to her courage, had perceived that her husband laboured under a delusion which was cruel and calamitous to himself. From the first, she transcends all blind resentment, and has true pity for the man who wrongs her. But, if she has fortitude for her own uses, she is also able to accept for her husband the inevitable pain which is needful to restore him to his better mind. She will not shorten the term of his suffering, because that suffering is beneficent. And at the last her silent embrace carries with it—and justly—a portion of that truth she had uttered long before:
INTRODUCTION.

How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me! Gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me thoroughly then, to say
You did mistake.

The calm and complete comprehension of the fact is a possession painful yet precious to Hermione; and it lifts her above all vulgar confusion of heart or temper, and above all unjust resentment.

Imogen, who is the reverse of grave and massive in character, but who has an exquisite vivacity of feeling and fancy, and a heart pure, quick, and ardent, passes from the swoon of her sudden anguish to a mood of bright and keen resentment, which is free from every trace of vindictive passion, and is indeed only pain disguised. And in like manner she forgives, not with self-possession and a broad, tranquil joy in the accomplished fact, but through a pure ardour, an exquisite eagerness of love and delight. Prospero's forgiveness is solemn, judicial, and has in it something abstract and impersonal. He cannot wrong his own higher nature, he cannot wrong his nobler reason, by cherishing so unworthy a passion as the desire of vengeance. Sebastian and Antonio, from whose conscience no remorse has been elicited, are met by no comfortable pardon. They have received their lesson of failure and pain, and may possibly be convinced of the good sense and prudence of honourable dealing, even if they cannot perceive its moral obligation. Alonso, who is repentant, is solemnly pardoned. The forgiveness of Prospero is an embodiment of impartial wisdom and loving justice.

When a man has attained some high and luminous tableland of joy or of renunciation; when he has really transcended self; or when some one of the everlasting virtuous powers of the world, — duty, or sacrifice, or the strength of any thing higher than oneself,—has assumed authority over him; forthwith a strange, pathetic, ideal light is shed over all beautiful things in the lower world which has been abandoned. We see the sunlight on our neighbour's field, while we are preoccupied about the grain that is growing in our own. And when we have ceased to hug our souls to any material possession, we see the sunlight wherever it falls. In the last chapter of George Eliot's great novel, Romola, who has ascended into her clear and calm solitude of self-transcending duty, bends tenderly over the children of Tito, uttering, in words made simple for their needs, the lore she has learnt from life, and seeing on their faces the light of strange, ideal beauty. In the latest plays of Shakespeare, the sympathetic reader can discern unmistakably a certain abandonment of the common joy of the world, a certain remoteness from the usual pleasures and sadnesses of life, and at the same time, all the more, this tender bending over those who are like children, still absorbed in their individual joys and sorrows.

Over the beauty of youth and the love of youth there is shed, in these plays of Shakespeare's final period, a clear yet tender luminousness, not elsewhere to be perceived in his writings. In his earlier plays, Shakespeare writes concerning young men and maidens, their loves, their mirth, their griefs, as one who is among them, who has a lively personal interest in their concerns, who can make merry with them, treat them familiarly, and, if need be, can mock them into good sense. There is nothing in these early plays wonderful, strangely beautiful, pathetic about youth and its joys and sorrows. In the histories and tragedies, as was to be expected, more massive, broader, or more profound objects of interest engaged the Poet's attention. But, in these latest plays, the beautiful pathetic light is always present. There are the sufferers, aged, experienced, tried,—Queen Catharine, Prospero, Hermione. And over against these there are the children absorbed in their happy and exquisite egoism,—Perdita and Miranda, Florizel and Ferdinand, and the boys of old Belarius.

The same means to secure ideality for these figures, so young and beautiful, is in each case (instinctively, perhaps, rather than deliberately) resorted to. They are lost children,—princes or princesses, removed from the Court, and its conventional surroundings, into some scene of rare natural beauty. There are the lost princes, Arviragus and Guiderius, among the mountains of Wales, drinking the free air, and offering their salutations to the risen Sun. There is Perdita, the shepherdess-princess, “queen of curds and cream,” sharing with old and young her flowers, lovelier and more undying than those that Proserpina let fall from Dis’s wagon. There is Miranda, (whose very name is significant of wonder,) made up of beauty, and love, and womanly pity, neither courtly nor rustic, with the breeding of an island of enchantment, where Prospero is her tutor and protector, and Caliban her servant, and the Prince of Naples her lover. In each of these plays we can see Shakespeare, as it were, tenderly bending over the joys and sorrows of youth. We recognize this rather through the total characterization, and through a feeling and a presence, than through definite incident or statement. But some of this feeling escapes in the disinterested joy and admiration of old Belarius when he gazes at the princely youths, and in Camillo’s loyalty to Florizel and Perdita; while it obtains more distinct expression in such a word as that which Prospero utters, when from a distance he watches with pleasure Miranda’s zeal to relieve

It is not chiefly because Prospero is a great enchanter, now about to break his magic staff, to drown his book deeper than ever plummet sounded, to dismiss his airy spirits, and to return to the practical service of his Dukedom, that we identify him in some measure with Shakespeare himself. It is rather because the temper of Prospero, the grave harmony of his character, his self-mastery, his calm validity of will, his sensitiveness to wrong, his unflattering justice, and, with these, a certain abandonment, a remoteness from the common joys and sorrows of the world, are characteristic of Shakespeare as discovered to us in all his latest plays. Prospero is a harmonious and fully-developed will. In the earlier play of fairy enchantments, A Midsummer-Night's Dream, the "human mortals" wander to and fro in a maze of error, misled by the mischievous frolic of Puck, the jester and clown of Fairyland. But here the spirits of the elements, and Caliban the gross genius of brute-matter,—needful for the service of life,—are brought under subjection to the human will of Prospero.

What is more, Prospero has entered into complete possession of himself. Shakespeare has shown us his quick sense of injury, his intellectual impatience, his occasional moment of keen irritability, in order that we may be more deeply aware of his abiding strength and self-possession, and that we may perceive how these have been grafted upon a temperament not impassive or unexcitable. And Prospero has reached not only the higher levels of moral attainment; he has also reached an altitude of thought from which he can survey the whole of human life, and see how small and yet how great it is. His heart is sensitive, he is profoundly touched by the joy of children, with whom in the egoism of their love he passes for a thing of secondary interest; he is deeply moved by the perfidy of his brother. His brain is readily set a-work, and can with difficulty be checked from eager and excessive energizing; he is subject to the access of sudden and agitating thought. But Prospero masters his own sensitiveness, emotional and intellectual:—

We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep. Sir, I am vex'd;
Bear with my weakness; my old brain is troubled:
Be not disturb'd with my infirmity:
If you be pleased, retire into my cell,
And there repose: a turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind.

"Such stuff as dreams are made on." Nevertheless, in this little life, in this dream, Prospero will maintain his dream-rights and fulfil his dream-duties. In the dream, he, a Duke, will accomplish Duke's work. Having idealized every thing, Shakespeare left every thing real. Bishop Berkeley's foot was no less able to set a pebble flying than was the lumbering foot of Dr. Johnson. Nevertheless, no material substance intervened between the soul of Berkeley and the immediate presence of the play of Divine power.

A thought which seems to run through the whole of The Tempest, appearing here and there like a coloured thread in some web, is the thought that the true freedom of man consists in service. Ariel, untouched by human feeling, is panting for his liberty: in the last words of Prospero are promised his enfranchisement and dismissal to the elements. Ariel reverences his great master, and serves him with bright alacrity; but he is bound by none of our human ties, strong and tender; and he will rejoice when Prospero is to him as though he never were. To Caliban, a land-fish, with the duller elements of earth and water in his composition, but no portion of the higher elements, air and fire, though he receives dim intimations of a higher world,—a musical humming, or a twangling, or a voice heard in sleep;—to Caliban, service is slavery. He hates to bear his logs; he fears the incomprehensible power of Prospero, and obeys, and curses. The great master has usurped the rights of the brute-power Caliban. And when Stephano and Trinculo appear, ridiculously impoverished specimens of humanity, with their shallow understandings and vulgar greeds, this poor earth-monster is possessed by a sudden fanaticism for liberty!—

'Ban, 'Ban, Ca—Caliban
Has a new master: get a new man.
Freedom, hey-day! hey-day, freedom! freedom, hey-day, freedom!

His new master also sings his impassioned hymn of liberty, the Marseillaise of the enchanted island:—

Flout 'em and scout 'em, and scout 'em and flout 'em;
Thought is free.

The leaders of the revolution, escaped from the stench and foulness of the horse-pond, King Stephano and his prime minister Trinculo, like too many leaders of the people, bring to an end their great achievement on behalf of liberty by quarrelling over booty,—the trumpery which the providence of Prospero had placed in their way. Caliban, though scarce more truly wise or instructed than before, at least discovers his particular error of the day and hour:—

What a thrice-double ass
Was I, to take this drunkard for a god,
And worship this dull fool!
INTRODUCTION.

It must be admitted that Shakespeare, if not, as Hartley Coleridge asserted, "a Tory and a gentleman," had within him some of the elements of English conservatism.

But, while Ariel and Caliban, each in his own way, are impatient of service, the human actors, in whom we are chiefly interested, are entering into bonds,—bonds of affection, bonds of duty, in which they find their truest freedom. Ferdinand and Miranda emulously contend in the task of bearing the burden which Prospero has imposed upon the Prince:

I am, in my condition,
A prince, Miranda; I do think, a king,—
I would, not so!—and would no more endure
This wooden slavery than to suffer
The flesh-fly blow my mouth. Hear my soul speak:
The very instant that I saw you, did
My heart fly to your service; there resides,
To make me slave to it; and for your sake
Am I this patient log-man.

And Miranda speaks with the sacred candour from which spring the nobler manners of a world more real and glad than the world of convention and proprieties and pruderies:

Hence, bashful cunning!
And prompt me, plain and holy innocence!
I am your wife, if you will marry me;
If not, I'll die your maid: to be your fellow
You may deny me; but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.
Ferd. My mistress, dearest,
And I thus humble ever.
Mira. My husband, then?
Ferd. Ay, with a heart as willing
As bondage e'er of freedom.

In an earlier part of the play, this chord which runs through it had been playfully struck in the description of Gonzalo's imaginary commonwealth, in which man is to be enfranchised from all the laborious necessities of life. Here is the ideal notional liberty, Shakespeare would say; and to attempt to realize it at once lands us in absurdities and self-contradictions:

For no kind of traffic
Would I admit; no name of magistrate;
Letters should not be known; riches, poverty,
And use of service, none; contract, succession,
Bourn, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none;
No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil;
No occupation; all men idle, all,
And women too, but innocent and pure;
No sovereignty:

Sebas. Yet he would be king on't.
Anto. The latter end of his commonwealth forgets the beginning.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—On a Ship at sea. A Storm, with Thunder and Lightning.

Enter Master and Boatswain severally.

Mast. Boatswain!
Boats. Here, master: what cheer?
Mast. Good,¹ speak to the mariners: fall to’t yarely,² or we run ourselves a-ground: bestir, bestir. [Exit.

Enter Mariner.

Boats. Heigh, my hearts! cheerly, cheerly, my hearts! yare, yare! Take in the topsail. Tend to the master’s whistle. [Exit I Mariner.]—Blow till thou burst thy wind,³ if room enough!⁴

Enter ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, FERDINAND, GONZALO, and Others.

Alon. Good boatswain, have care. Where’s the master? Play the men.⁵

Boats. I pray now, keep below.

Anto. Where is the master, boatswain?

Boats. Do you not hear him? You mar our labour: keep your cabins; you do assist the storm.

² Yarely is nimbly, briskly, or alertly. So, in the next speech, yare, an imperative verb, is, be nimble, or be on the alert. The word is seldom if ever used, now in any form, but was much used in the Poet’s time. In North’s Plutarch we have such phrases as “galleys not yare of steerage,” and “ships light of yarage,” and “galleys heavy of yarage.”

³ In Shakespeare’s time, the wind was often represented pictorially by the figure of a man with his cheeks puffed out to their utmost tension with the act of blowing. Probably the Poet had such a figure in his mind. So in King Lear, iii. 2: “Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks!” Also in Pericles, iii. 1: “Blow, and split thyself.”

⁴ That is, “if we have sea-room enough.” So in Pericles, iii. 1: “But sea-room, an the brine and cloudy billow kiss the Moon, I care not.”

⁵ Act with spirit, behave like men. So in 2 Samuel, x. 12: “Be of good courage, and let us play the men for our people.”
Gonza. Nay, good, be patient.

Boats. When the sea is. Hence! What care these roarers for the name of king? To cabin: silence! trouble us not.

Gonza. Good, yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Boats. None that I more love than myself. You are a counsellor: if you can command these elements to silence, and work the peace of the present, we will not hand a rope more; use your authority: if you cannot, give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin for the mischance of the hour, if it so hap.—Cheerly, good hearts!—Out of our way, I say.        [Exit.

Gonza. I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning-mark upon him; his complexion is perfect gallows.—Stand fast, good Fate, to his hanging! make the rope of his destiny our cable, for our own doth little advantage! If he be not born to be hang'd, our case is miserable.        [Exeunt.

Re-enter Boatswain.

Boats. Down with the top-mast! yare; lower, lower! Bring her to try wi' th' main-course.        [A cry within.] A

---

6 Present for present time. So in the Prayer-Book: "That those things may please Him which we do at this present." And in 1 Corinthians, xv. 6: "Of whom the greater part remain unto this present."

7 Complexion was often used for nature, native bent or aptitude. See The Merchant of Venice, page 134, note 7.

8 Of this order Lord Mulgrave, a sailor critic, says, "The striking the top-mast was a new invention in Shakespeare's time, which he here very properly introduces. He has placed his ship in the situation in which it was indisputably right to strike the top-mast,—where he had not sea-room."

9 This appears to have been a common nautical phrase. So in Hack-luyt's Voyages, 1598: "And when the bark had way we cut the hauser, and so gat the sea to our friend, and tried out all the day with our maine course." Also in Smith's Sea Grammar, 1627: "Let us lie at trie with our maine plague upon this howling! they are louder than the weather or our office.\(^\text{10}\) —

_Re-enter Sebastian, Antonio, and Gonzalo._

Yet again! what do you here? Shall we give o’er, and drown? Have you a mind to sink?

_Sebas._ A pox o’ your throat, you bawling, blasphemous, incharitable dog!

_Boats._ Work you, then.

_Anto._ Hang, cur, hang! you whoreson, insolent noise-maker, we are less afraid to be drown’d\(^\text{11}\) than thou art.

_Gonza._ I’ll warrant him for drowning,\(^\text{12}\) though the ship were no stronger than a nut-shell.

_Boats._ Lay her a-hold, a-hold! set her two courses!\(^\text{13}\) off to sea again; lay her off!

course.” And Sir Walter Raleigh speaks of being “obliged to lye at trye with our main course and mizen.” To lie at try is to keep as close to the wind as possible.

\(^{10}\) _Weather for storm._ “Their howling drowns both the roaring of the tempest and the commands of the officer,” or “our official orders.”

\(^{11}\) “Less afraid of being drown’d.” So the Poet often uses the infinitive gerundively, or like the Latin gerund. See King Lear, page 117, note 18; also page 205, note 28.

\(^{12}\) As to, or as regards, drowning. A not uncommon use of for.—Gonzalo has in mind the old proverb, “He that is born to be hanged will never be drowned.”

\(^{13}\) A ship’s courses are her largest lower sails; “so called,” says Holt, “because they contribute most to give her way through the water, and thus enable her to feel the helm, and steer her course better than when they are not set or spread to the wind.” Captain Glascock, another sailor critic, comments thus: “The ship’s head is to be put leeward, and the vessel to be drawn off the land under that canvas nautically denominated the two courses.” (To lay a ship a-hold is to bring her to lie as near the wind as she can, in order to keep clear of the land, and get her out to sea.) So Admiral Smith, in his Sailors’ Wordbook: “A hold: A term of our early navigators, for bringing a ship close to the wind, so as to hold or keep to it.”
Re-enter Mariners, wet.

Mariners. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost!
[Exeunt.

Boats. What, must our mouths be cold?

Gonza. The King and Prince at prayers! let us assist them,
For our case is as theirs.

Sebas. I’m out of patience.

Anto. We’re merely cheated out of our lives by drunkards.

This wide-chopp’d rascal — would thou mightst lie drowning,
The washing of ten tides!

Gonza. He’ll be hang’d yet,
Though every drop of water swear against it,
And gape at widest to glut him.

A confused noise within. Mercy on us! We split, we split!—Farewell, my wife and children!—Farewell, brother!—We split, we split, we split!
[Exit Boatswain.

Anto. Let’s all sink wi’ th’ King.
[Exit.

Sebas. Let’s take leave of him.
[Exit.

Gonza. Now would I give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground; ling, heath, broom, furze, any 14 Merely, here, is utterly or absolutely. A frequent usage. So in Hamlet, i. 2: “Things rank and gross in nature possess it merely.”

15 Glut for englut; that is, swallow up. — Widest is here a monosyllable. The same with many words that are commonly two syllables.

16 This double elision of with and the, so as to draw the two into one syllable, is quite frequent, especially in the Poet’s later plays. So before in this scene: “Bring her to try wi’ th’ main course.” Single elisions for the same purpose, such as by th’, for th’, from th’, to th’, &c., are still more frequent. So in the first speech of the next scene: “Mounting to th’ welkin’s cheek.”
thing. The wills above be done! but I would fain die a dry death. [Exit.

Scene II. — The Island: before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mira. If by your art, my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them. The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch, But that the sea, mounting to th’ welkin’s cheek, Dashes the fire out. O, I have suffer’d With those that I saw suffer! a brave vessel, Who had no doubt some noble creatures in her,

17 Ling, heath, broom, and furze were names of plants growing on British barrens. So in Harrison’s description of Britain, prefixed to Holinshed: “Brome, heth, firze, brakes, whinnes, ling, &c.”

18 Of course, “the wills above” is the will of the Powers above.

19 The first scene of The Tempest is a very striking instance of the great accuracy of Shakespeare’s knowledge in a professional science, the most difficult to attain without the help of experience. He must have acquired it by conversation with some of the most skilful seamen of that time. The succession of events is strictly observed in the natural progress of the distress described; the expedients adopted are the most proper that could have been devised for a chance of safety: and it is neither to the want of skill of the seamen or the bad qualities of the ship, but solely to the power of Prospero, that the shipwreck is to be attributed. The words of command are not only strictly proper, but are only such as point the object to be attained, and no superfluous ones of detail. Shakespeare’s ship was too well manned to make it necessary to tell the seamen how they were to do it, as well as what they were to do. — Lord Mulgrave.

1 Welkin is sky. We have other like expressions; as, “the cloudy cheeks of heaven,” in Richard the Second, and “the wide cheeks o’ the air,” in Coriolanus. — The hyperbole of waves rolling sky-high occurs repeated. So in The Winter’s Tale, iii. 3: “Now the ship boring the Moon with her main-mast, and anon swallowed with yeast and froth.” And in Othello, ii. 1: “The wind-shaked surge seems to cast water on the burning bear.”

2 Brave is fine or splendid; like the Scottish brav. Repeatedly so in this play, as also elsewhere.
Dash'd all to pieces. O, the cry did knock Against my very heart! Poor souls, they perish'd!
Had I been any god of power, I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or e'er
It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and
The fraughting souls within her.

_Pro._ Be collected;
No more amazement: tell your piteous heart
There's no harm done.

_Mira._ O, woe the day!

_Pro._ No harm.
I have done nothing but in care of thee,—
Of thee, my dear one, thee, my daughter,—who Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing
Of whence I am; nor that I am more better
Than Prospero, master of a full-poor cell,
And thy no greater father.

_Mira._ More to know
Did never meddle with my thoughts.

_Pro._ 'Tis time
I should inform thee further. Lend thy hand,
And pluck my magic garment from me.—So:

[Lays down his robe.]

3 Or e'er is before or sooner than. So in Ecclesiastes, xii. 6: "Or ever the silver cord be loosed." See, also, _Hamlet_, page 62, note 31.

4 Fraught is an old form of freight. Present usage would require fraughted.
In Shakespeare's time, the active and passive forms were very often used indiscriminately. So, here, "fraughting souls" is freighted souls, or souls on freight.

5 The sense of amazement was much stronger than it is now. Here it is anguish or distress of mind.

6 This doubling of comparatives occurs continually in all the writers of Shakespeare's time. The same with superlatives.

7 To meddle is, properly, to mix, to mingle.
Lie there, my art. — Wipe thou thine eyes; have comfort. The direful spectacle of the wreck, which touch'd The very virtue of compassion in thee, I have with such prevision in mine art So safely order'd, that there is no soul — No, not so much perdition as an hair Betid to any creature in the vessel Which thou heard'st cry, which thou saw'st sink. Sit down; For thou must now know further.

Mira. You have often Begun to tell me what I am; but stopp'd, And left me to a bootless inquisition, Concluding, Stay, not yet.

Pros. The hour's now come; The very minute bids thee ope thine ear: Obey, and be attentive. Canst thou remember A time before we came unto this cell? I do not think thou canst; for then thou wast not Out three years old.

Mira. Certainly, sir, I can.

Pros. By what? by any other house or person? Of any thing the image tell me that Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mira. 'Tis far off, And rather like a dream than an assurance That my remembrance warrants. Had I not

8 Lord Burleigh, at night when he put off his gown, used to say, "Lie there, Lord Treasurer"; and, bidding adieu to all State affairs, disposed himself to his quiet rest.—FULLER'S Holy State.

9 The sense is here left incomplete, and purposely, no doubt. Prospero has many like changes of construction in this part of the scene.

10 Not fully three years old. We have a like use of out in iv. i: "But play with sparrows, and be a boy right out."
Four or five women once that tended me?

Pros. Thou hadst, and more, Miranda. But how is it
That this lives in thy mind? What see'st thou else
In the dark backward and abysm$^{11}$ of time?
If thou remember'st aught ere thou camest here,
How thou camest here, thou mayst.$^{12}$

Mira. But that I do not.

Pros. Twelve year since, Miranda, twelve year$^{13}$ since,
Thy father was the Duke of Milan, and
A prince of power.

Mira. Sir, are you not my father?

Pros. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and
She said thou wast my daughter; and thy father
Was Duke of Milan; thou his only heir,
A princess, — no worse issued.

Mira. O the Heavens!
What foul play had we, that we came from thence?
Or blessèd was't we did?

Pros. Both, both, my girl:
By foul play, as thou say'st, were we heaved thence;
But blessedly holp$^{14}$ hither.

Mira. O, my heart bleeds
To think o' the teen$^{15}$ that I have turn'd you to,

$^{11}$ Abysm is an old form of abyss; from the old French abisme.

$^{12}$ "If thou remember'st aught ere thou camest here, thou mayst also remember how thou camest here."

$^{13}$ In words denoting time, space, and quantity, the singular form was often used with the plural sense. So we have mile and pound for miles and pounds. — In this line, the first year is two syllables, the second one. Often so with various other words, such as hour, fire, &c.

$^{14}$ Holp or holpen is the old preterite of help; occurring continually in The Psalter, which is an older translation of the Psalms than that in the Bible.

$^{15}$ Teen is an old word for trouble, anxiety, or sorrow. So in Love's Labours Lost, iv. 3: "Of sighs, of groans, of sorrow, and of teen."
Which is from my remembrance! Please you, further.

Pross. My brother, and thy uncle, call’d Antonio,—
I pray thee, mark me;—that a brother should
Be so perfidious!—he whom, next thyself,
Of all the world I loved, and to him put
The manage of my State; as, at that time,
Through all the signiories it was the first, And Prospero the prime Duke; being so reputed
In dignity, and for the liberal arts
Without a parallel: those being all my study,
The government I cast upon my brother,
And to my State grew stranger, being transported
And rapt in secret studies. Thy false uncle,—
Dost thou attend me?

Mira. Sir, most heedfully.

Pross. — Being once perfected how to grant suits,
How to deny them; who t’ advance, and who
To trash for over-topping,—new-created
The creatures that were mine, I say, or changed ’em,
Or else new-form’d ’em; having both the key
Of officer and office, set all hearts i’ the State
To what tune pleased his ear; that now he was 16 Manage for management or administration. Repeatedly so.

17 Signiory for lordship or principality. Botero, in his Relations of the World, 1630, says, “Milan claims to be the first duchy in Europe.”
18 This use of who where present usage requires whom was not ungrammatical in Shakespeare’s time.
19 To trash for overtopping is to check the overgrowth, to reduce the exorbitancy. The word seems to have been a hunting-term for checking the speed of hounds when too forward; the trash being a strap or rope fastened to the dog’s neck, and dragging on the ground. The sense of clogging or keeping back is the right antithesis to advance.
20 “The key of officer and office” is the tuning key; as of a piano.
21 That is here equivalent to so that, or insomuch that. Continually so in old poetry, and not seldom in old prose.
The ivy which had hid my princely trunk,
And suck'd the verdure out on't. Thou attend'st not.

Mira. O good sir, I do.

Pros. I pray thee, mark me.
I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To closeness, and the bettering of my mind
With that which, but by being so retired,
O'er-prized all popular rate, in my false brother
Awaked an evil nature; and my trust,
Like a good parent, did beget of him
A falsehood, in its contrary as great
As my trust was; which had indeed no limit,
A confidence sans bound. He being thus lorded,
Not only with what my revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact, — like one
Who having unto truth, by falsing of it,

22 The old gentleman thinks his daughter is not attending to his tale, because his own thoughts keep wandering from it; his mind being filled with other things,—the tempest he has got up, and the consequences of it. This absence or distraction of mind aptly registers itself in the irregular and broken style of his narrative.

23 This is the exceptive but, as it is called, and has the force of be out, of which it is, indeed, an old contraction. So later in this scene: “And, but he's something stain'd with grief,” &c.; where but evidently has the force of except that.

24 The meaning seems to be, “Which would have exceeded all popular estimate, but that it withdrew me from my public duties”; as if he were sensible of his error in getting so “rapt in secret studies” as to leave the State a prey to violence and usurpation.

25 Sans is the French equivalent for without. The Poet uses it whenever he wants a monosyllable with that meaning.

26 Shakespeare, in a few instances, has revenue with the accent on the first syllable, as in the vulgar pronunciation of our time. Here the accent is on the second syllable, as it should be. See Hamlet, page 135, note 8.

27 The verb to false was often used for to treat falsely, to falsify, to forge, to lie. So in Cymbeline, ii. 3: “And make Diana's rangers false them-
Made such a sinner of his memory
To credit28 his own lie, — he did believe
He was indeed the Duke; out o' the substitution,29
And executing the outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative: hence his ambition growing, —
Dost thou hear?30

Mira. Your tale, sir, would cure deafness.

Pros. To have no screen between this part he play'd
And them he play'd it for,31 he needs will be Absolute Milan. Me,32 poor man, my library
Was dukedom large enough: of temporal royalties
He thinks me now incapable; confederates —
So dry he was for sway 33 — wi' th' King of Naples
To give him annual tribute, do him homage,
Subject his coronet to his crown, and bend
The dukedom, yet unbow'd, — alas, poor Milan! —
To most ignoble stooping.

selves." And in The Faerie Queene, ii. 1, 1: "Whom Princes late displeasure left in bands, for falsèd letters." Also in i. 3, 30: "And in his falsèd fancy he her takes to be the fairest wight," &c. And in Drant's Horace: "The taverner that falseth othes, and little reckes to lye." — The pronoun it may refer to truth, or may be used absolutely; probably the former. The Poet has such phrases as to prince it, for to act the prince, and to monster it for to be a monster. And so the word is often used now in all sorts of speech and writing; as to braze it out, and to foot it through. See Critical Notes.

28 "As to credit" is the meaning. The Poet often omits as in such cases. Sometimes he omits both of the correlatives so and as.

29 That is, "in consequence of his being my substitute or deputy."

30 In this place, hear was probably meant as a dissyllable; just as year a little before. So, at all events, the verse requires.

31 This is well explained by Mr. P. A. Daniel: "Prospero was the screen behind which the traitorous Antonio governed the people of Milan; and, to remove this screen between himself and them, he conspired his brother's overthrow."

32 "For me" is the meaning. Such ellipses are frequent.

33 So thirsty for power or rule; no uncommon use of dry now.
Mira. O the Heavens!

Pros. Mark his condition, and th' event;\(^{34}\) then tell me, If this might be a brother.

Mira. I should sin To think but nobly\(^{35}\) of my grandmother.

Pros. Good wombs have borne bad sons. Now the condition:
This King of Naples, being an enemy To me inveterate, hearkens my brother's suit;
Which was, that he, in lieu o' the premises,\(^{36}\) — Of homage, and I know not how much tribute, — Should presently\(^{37}\) extirpate me and mine Out of the dukedom, and confer fair Milan, With all the honours, on my brother: whereon, A treacherous army levied, one midnight Fated to th' practice\(^{38}\) did Antonio open The gates of Milan; and, i' the dead of darkness, The ministers for th' purpose hurried thence Me and thy crying self.

Mira. Alack, for pity!
I, not remembering how I cried on't then, Will cry it o'er again: it is a hint\(^{39}\) That wrings mine eyes to't.

Pros. Hear a little further,

\(^{34}\) Condition is the terms of his compact with the King of Naples; event, the consequences that followed.

\(^{35}\) "But nobly" is otherwise than nobly, of course.

\(^{36}\) In lieu of is in return for, or in consideration of. Shakespeare never uses the phrase in its present meaning, instead of.

\(^{37}\) Presently is immediately or forthwith. A frequent usage.

\(^{38}\) Plot, stratagem, contrivance are old meanings of practice.

\(^{39}\) Hint for cause or theme. A frequent usage. So again in ii. 1: "Our hint of woe is common."
And then I’ll bring thee to the present business
Which now’s upon’s; without the which this story
Were most impertinent.

Mira. Wherefore did they not
That hour destroy us?

Pros. Well demanded, wench:
My tale provokes that question. Dear, they durst not —
So dear the love my people bore me — set
A mark so bloody on the business; but
With colours fairer painted their foul ends.
In few, they hurried us aboard a bark,
Bore us some leagues to sea; where they prepared
A rotten carcass of a boat, not rigg’d,
Nor tackle, sail, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively had quit it: there they hoist us,
To cry to th’ sea that roar’d to us; to sigh
To th’ winds, whose pity, sighing back again,
Did us but loving wrong.

Mira. Alack, what trouble
Was I then to you!

Pros. O, a cherubin
Thou wast that did preserve me! Thou didst smile,
Infuséd with a fortitude from Heaven,
When I have degg’d the sea with drops full salt,

40 Impertinent is irrelevant, or out of place; not pertinent; the old meaning of the word. The Poet never uses irrelevant.
41 Wench was a common term of affectionate familiarity.
42 That is, in few words, in short. Often so.
43 Hoist for hoisted; as, a little before, quit for quitted. So in Hamlet, iii. 4: “Tis the sport to have the engineer hoist with his own petar.” The Poet has many preterites so formed. And the same usage occurs in The Psalter; as in the 93d Psalm: “The floods are risen, O Lord, the floods have lift up their voice.”
44 To deg is an old provincial word for to sprinkle. So explained in Under my burden groan'd; which raised in me
An undergoing stomach, to bear up
Against what should ensue.

_Mira._ How came we ashore?

_Pro. _ By Providence divine.

Some food we had, and some fresh water, that
A noble Neapolitan, Gonzalo,
Out of his charity,—being then appointed
Master of this design,—did give us; with Rich garments, linens, stuffs, and necessaries,
Which since have steaded much; so, of his gentleness,
Knowing I loved my books, he furnish'd me,
From mine own library, with volumes that
I prize above my dukedom.

_Mira._ Would I might
But ever see that man!

_Pro._ Now I arise:

_Carr's Glossary:_ "To _deg_ clothes is to sprinkle them with water previous to ironing." And in Atkinson's _Glossary of the Cleveland Dialect_, _degg_ or _dagg_ is explained "to sprinkle with water, to drizzle." Also, in Brockett's _Glossary of North-Country Words_: "_Dag_, a drizzling rain, dew upon the grass."—The foregoing quotations are from the Clarendon edition. See Critical Notes.

45 An _undergoing stomach_ is an _enduring courage_. Shakespeare uses _stomach_ repeatedly for _courage_.

46 Have stood us in good stead, or done us much service.

47 These words have been a great puzzle to the editors, and various explanations of them have been given. Staunton prints them as addressed to Ariel, and thinks this removes the difficulty. So taken, the words are meant to give Ariel notice that the speaker is now ready for his services in charming Miranda to sleep. But this does not seem to me very likely, as it makes Prospero give Ariel a second notice, in his next speech. So I rather adopt the explanation of Mr. William Aldis Wright, who thinks Prospero means that "the crisis in his own fortunes has come"; that he is now about to emerge from the troubles of which he has been speaking; and that he re-
Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow.
Here in this island we arrived; and here
Have I, thy schoolmaster, made thee more profit
Than other princesses can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful.
SCENE II.

THE TEMPEST.

Come away, servant, come! I'm ready now: Approach, my Ariel; come!

Enter Ariel.

Ari. All hail, great master! grave sir, hail! I come To answer thy best pleasure; be’t to fly, To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride On the curl’d clouds: to thy strong bidding task Ariel and all his quality.51

Pros. Hast thou, spirit, Perform’d to point 52 the tempest that I bade thee?

Ari. To every article. I boarded the King’s ship; now on the beak, Now in the waist,53 the deck, in every cabin, I flamed amazement: sometime I’d divide, And burn in many places; on the top-mast, The yards, and bowsprit, would I flame distinctly,54 Then meet and join. Jove’s lightnings, the precursors O’ the dreadful thunder-claps, more momentary55 And sight-outrunning were not: the fire, and cracks Of sulphurous roaring, the most mighty Neptune is reconciled and shaded in the humanity and natural feelings of the father. In the very first speech of Miranda the simplicity and tenderness of her character are at once laid open; it would have been lost in direct contact with the agitation of the first scene.—COLERIDGE.

51 That is, all of his kind, all his fellow-spirits, or who are like him.
52 Perform’d exactly, or in every point; from the French à point.
53 Beak, the prow of the ship; waist, the part between the quarter-deck and forecastle.
54 So in the account of Robert Tomson’s voyage, 1555, quoted by Mr. Hunter: “This light continued aboard our ship about three hours, flying from mast to mast, and from top to top; and sometimes it would be in two or three places at once.” In the text, distinctly has the sense of separately; flaming in different places at the same time.
55 Momentary in the sense of instantaneous.
Seem'd to besiege, and make his bold waves tremble,
Yea, his dread trident shake.

_Pros._ My brave spirit!

Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason?

_Ari._ Not a soul
But felt a fever of the mad, and play'd
Some tricks of desperation. All but mariners
Plunged in the foaming brine, and quit the vessel,
Then all a-fire with me: the King's son, Ferdinand,
With hair up-staring — then like reeds, not hair, —
Was the first man that leap'd; cried, _Hell is empty,
And all the devils are here._

_Pros._ Why, that's my spirit!

But was not this nigh shore?

_Ari._ Close by, my master.

_Pros._ But are they, Ariel, safe?

_Ari._ Not a hair perish'd;

On their unstaining garments not a blemish,
But fresher than before: and, as thou badest me,
In troops I have dispersed them 'bout the isle.

The King's son have I landed by himself;

56 _Coil_ is _stur, tumult, or disturbance._

57 Such a fever as madmen feel when the frantic fit is on them.

58 _Upstaring_ is _sticking out "like quills upon the fretful porpentine." So in _The Faerie Queene,_ vi. _xi, 27_: “With ragged weeds, and _locks upstaring hye._” And in _Julius Caesar,_ iv. 3: “Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil, that makest my blood cold, and my hair to _stare?_”

59 _Unstaining_ for _unstained_; another instance of the indiscriminate use of active and passive forms. This usage, both in participles and adjectives, is frequent all through these plays. So, in _The Winter's Tale,_ iv. 4, we have _"discontenting father"_ for _discontented father_; and in _Antony and Cleopatra,_ iii. _r_., _"all-obeying breath" for all-obeyed breath_, that is, _breath that all obey_. See, also, page 49, note 4.
Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs
In an odd angle of the isle, and sitting,
His arms in this sad knot.

Pros. Of the King’s ship
The mariners, say, how hast thou disposed,
And all the rest o’ the fleet?

Ari. Safely in harbour
Is the King’s ship; in the deep nook, where once
Thou call’dst me up at midnight to fetch dew
From the still-vex’d Bermoothes, there she’s hid:
The mariners all under hatches stow’d;
Who, with a charm join’d to their suffer’d labour,
I’ve left asleep: and, for the rest o’ the fleet
Which I dispersed, they all have met again,
And are upon the Mediterranean flote,
Bound sadly home for Naples;
Supposing that they saw the King’s ship wreck’d,
And his great person perish.

Pros. Ariel, thy charge
Exactly is perform’d: but there’s more work.

Odd angle is insignificant or out-of-the-way corner.
His arms folded up as in sorrowful meditation.
Still-vex’d is ever-troubled. The Poet very often uses still in the sense of ever or continually. The Bermudas were supposed to be inhabited or haunted by witches and devils, and the sea around them to be agitated with perpetual storms. Bermoothes was then the common spelling of Bermudas. So in Fletcher’s Women Pleased, i. 2: “The Devil should think of purchasing that egg-shell, to victual such a witch for the Bermoothes.” Also in Webster’s Duchess of Malfi, iii. 2: “I would sooner swim to the Bermootha’s on two politicians’ rotten bladders.”

Flote, like the French flot, is flood, wave, or sea. This passage shows that the scene of the play is not laid in the Bermudas, as there has not been time for the rest of the fleet to sail so far. And Ariel’s trip to fetch the dew mentioned above was a much greater feat than going from one part of the Bermoothes to another.
What is the time o' the day?

_Ari._ Past the mid season,

At least two glasses.\(^6^4\)

_Prosp._ The time 'twixt six and now

Must by us both be spent most preciously.

_Ari._ Is there more toil? Since thou dost give me pains,

Let me remember\(^6^5\) thee what thou hast promised,

Which is not yet perform'd me.

_Prosp._ How now! moody?

What is't thou canst demand?

_Ari._ My liberty.

_Prosp._ Before the time be out? no more!

_Ari._ I pr'ythee,

Remember I have done thee worthy service;

Told thee no lies, made no mistakings, served

Without or grudge or grumblings: thou didst promise

To bate me a full year.

_Prosp._ Dost thou forget

From what a torment I did free thee?

_Ari._ No.

_Prosp._ Thou dost; and think'st it much to tread the ooze

Of the salt deep; to run upon the sharp

Wind of the North; to do me business in

The veins o' the earth when it is baked with frost.

_Ari._ I do not, sir.

_Prosp._ Thou liest, malignant thing!\(^6^6\) Hast thou forgot

The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envy\(^6^7\)

\(^{6^4}\) Two glasses is two runnings of the hour-glass.

\(^{6^5}\) Remember for remind, or put in mind. Often so.

\(^{6^6}\) Prospero should not be supposed to say this in earnest: he is merely playing with his delicate and amiable minister.

\(^{6^7}\) Here, as commonly in Shakespeare, envy is malice. And so he has envious repeatedly for malicious. The usage was common.
Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgot her?

_Ari._ No, sir.

_Prosp._ Thou hast: where was she born? speak; tell me.

_Ari._ Sir, in Argier.68

_Prosp._ O, was she so? I must Once in a month recount what thou hast been, Which thou forget'st. This damn'd witch Sycorax, For mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible To enter human hearing, from Argier, Thou know'st, was banish'd: for one thing she had,69 They would not take her life. Is not this true?

_Ari._ Ay, sir.

_Prosp._ This blue-eyed hag70 was hither brought, And here was left by th' sailors. Thou, my slave, As thou report'st thyself, wast then her servant; And, for71 thou wast a spirit too delicate To act her earthy and abhorr'd commands, Refusing her grand hests,72 she did confine thee, By help of her more potent ministers, And in her most unmitigable rage, Into a cloven pine;73 within which rift

---

68 Argier is the old English name for Algiers.

69 What this one thing was, appears in Prospero's next speech.

70 Blue-eyed and blue eyes were used, not for what we so designate, but for blueness about the eyes. So, in _As You Like It_, iii. 2, we have "a blue eye, and a sunken," to denote a gaunt, haggard, and cadaverous look. And so, in the text, blue-eyed is used as signifying extreme ugliness. In the Poet's time, what we call blue eyes were commonly called gray, and were considered eminently beautiful.

71 Here, as often, for is because. See _The Merchant_, page 96, note 6.

72 Hests is commands, orders, or behests.

73 Into and in were often used indiscriminately. Here, however, I suspect the sense of both words is implied: "She thrust you into a splitted pine, and there fastened you in."
Imprison'd thou didst painfully remain
A dozen years; within which space she died,
And left thee there; where thou didst vent thy groans
As fast as mill-wheels strike. Then was this island—
Save for the son that she did litter here,
A freckled whelp, hag-born—not honour'd with
A human shape.

_Ari._ Yes, Caliban her son.

_Proz._ Dull thing, I say so; he, that Caliban,
Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know'st
What torment I did find thee in: thy groans
Did make wolves howl, and penetrate the breasts
Of ever-angry bears. It was a torment
To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax
Could not again undo: it was mine art,
When I arrived and heard thee, that made gape
The pine, and let thee out.

_Ari._ I thank thee, master.

_Proz._ If thou more murmur'st, I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till
Thou'st howl'd away twelve Winters.

_Ari._ Pardon, master:
I will be correspondent\(^{74}\) to command,
And do my spriting gently.

_Proz._ Do so; and after two days
I will discharge thee.

_Ari._ That's my noble master!
What shall I do? say what; what shall I do?

_Proz._ Go make thyself like to a nymph o' the sea:
Be subject to no sight but mine; invisible
To every eyeball else. Go take this shape,

\(^{74}\) Correspondent for responsive; that is, obedient, or submissive.
And hither come in't: hence, with diligence! —

[Exit Ariel.

Awake, dear heart, awake! thou hast slept well; Awake!

Mira. [Waking.] The strangeness of your story put Heaviness in me.

Pros. Shake it off. Come on; We'll visit Caliban my slave, who never Yields us kind answer.

Mira. 'Tis a villain, sir, I do not love to look on.

Pros. But, as 'tis, We cannot miss him: he does make our fire, Fetch in our wood, and serves in offices That profit us. — What, ho! slave! Caliban! Thou earth, thou! speak.

Cal. [Within.] There's wood enough within.

Pros. Come forth, I say! there's other business for thee: Come forth, thou tortoise! when! —

Re-enter Ariel, like a Water-nymph.

Fine apparition! My quaint Ariel, Hark in thine ear.

Ari. My lord, it shall be done. [Exit.

Pros. Thou poisonous slave, come forth!

Enter Caliban.

Cal. As wicked dew as e'er my mother brush'd

75 Cannot do without him, or cannot spare him. So in Lyly's Euphues: "Honey and wax, both so necessary that we cannot miss them."

76 When! was in common use as an exclamation of impatience.

77 Ingenious, artful, adroit, are old meanings of quaint.

78 "Wicked dew" is, probably, dew that has been cursed, and so made poisonous or baleful. See Critical Notes.
With raven's feather from unwholesome fen
Drop on you both! a south-west blow on ye,
And blister you all o'er! 79

Pros. For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have cramps,
Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up; urchins 80
Shall, for that vast 81 of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee; thou shalt be pinch'd
As thick as honeycomb, each pinch more stinging
Than bees that made 'em. 82

Cal. I must eat my dinner.
This island's mine, by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou takest from me. When thou cam'est here first,
Thou strokedst me, and madest much of me; wouldst give me
Water with berries in't; 83 and teach me how
To name the bigger light, and how the less,
That burn by day and night: and then I loved thee,
And show'd thee all the qualities o' the isle,
The fresh springs, brine-pits, barren place, and fertile:

79 The Poet repeatedly ascribes a blighting virulence to the south-west wind; perhaps because, in England, that wind often comes charged with the breath of the Gulf-stream. So he has "the south-fog rot him!" and "all the contagion of the south light on you!"

80 Urchins were fairies of a particular class. Hedgehogs were also called urchins; and it is probable that the sprites were so named, because they were of a mischievous kind, the urchin being anciently deemed a very noxious animal.

81 So in Hamlet, i. 2, "in the dead vast and middle of the night"; meaning the silent void or vacancy of night, when spirits were anciently supposed to walk abroad on errands of love or sport or mischief.

82 Honeycomb is here regarded as plural, probably in reference to the cells of which honeycomb is composed.

83 It does not well appear what this was. Coffee was known, but, I think, not used, in England in Shakespeare's time. Burton, in his Anatomy of Melancholy, 1632, has the following: "The Turks have a drink called coffa, so named of a berry as black as soot, and as bitter."
Cursèd be I that did so! All the charms
Of Sycorax, toads, beetles, bats, light on you!
For I am all the subjects that you have,
Which first was mine own king: and here you sty me
In this hard rock, whiles you do keep from me
The rest o' the island.

Pros. Thou most lying slave,
Whom stripes may move, not kindness, I have used thee,
Filth as thou art, with human care; and lodged thee
In mine own cell, till thou didst seek to violate
The honour of my child.

Cal. O ho, O ho! would 't had been done!
Thou didst prevent me; I had peopled else
This isle with Calibans.

Pros. Abhorrèd slave,
Which any print of goodness wilt not take,
Being capable of all ill! I pitied thee,
Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other: when thou didst not, savage,
Know thine own meaning, but wouldst gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. But thy vile race,
Though thou didst learn, had that in't which good natures
Could not abide to be with; therefore wast thou

84 Did not attach any meaning to the sounds he uttered. — Coleridge remarks upon Caliban as follows: "Caliban is all earth, all condensed and gross in feelings and images; he has the dawnings of understanding, without reason or the moral sense; and in him, as in some brute animals, this advance to the intellectual faculties, without the moral sense, is marked by the appearance of vice. For it is in the primacy of the moral being only that man is truly human; in his intellectual powers he is certainly approached by the brutes; and, man's whole system duly considered, those powers cannot be viewed as other than means to an end, that is, morality."
Deservedly confined into this rock,
Who hadst deserved more than a prison.

_Cal._ You taught me language; and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curse. The red plague rid you
For learning me your language!

_Pro._ Hag-seed, hence!
Fetch us in fuel; and be quick, thou'rt best,
To answer other business. Shrugg'st thou, malice?
If thou neglect'st, or dost unwillingly
What I command, I'll rack thee with old cramps,
Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar,
That beasts shall tremble at thy din.

_Cal._ No, pray thee.—

_[Aside.]_ I must obey: his art is of such power,
It would control my dam's god, Setebos,
And make a vassal of him.

_Pro._ So, slave; hence!

_[Exit Caliban._

85 Rid here means _destroy_ or _dispatch_. So in _Richard the Second, v. 4_: "I am the King's friend, and will _rid_ his foe."—Touching the "red plague," Halliwell quotes from _Practise of Physicke, 1605_: "Three different kinds of plague-sore are mentioned; sometimes it is _red_, otherwhiles yellow, and sometimes blacke, which is the very worst and most venimous."

86 *Old_ was much used simply as an intensive, just as _huge_ often is now. The Poet has it repeatedly. See _The Merchant_, page 181, note 2.

87 *Ache_ was formerly pronounced like the letter _H_. The plural, _aches_, was accordingly two syllables. We have many instances of such pronunciation in the old writers. So in _Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 7_: "I had a wound here that was like a T, but now 'tis made an H." It is said that Kemble the actor undertook to revive the old pronunciation of _aches_ on the stage; but the audience would not stand it, and hissed him out of it.

88 *Setebos_ was the name of an American god, or rather devil, worshipped by the Patagonians. In Eden's _History of Travaile, 1577_, is an account of Magellan's voyage to the South Pole, containing a description of this god and his worshippers; wherein the author says: "When they felt the shackles fast about their legs, they began to doubt; but the captain did put them in Re-enter Ariel invisible, playing and singing; Ferdinand following.

Ariel’s Song.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands:
Curtsied when you have, and kiss’d
The wild waves whist.
Foot it fealty here and there;
And, sweet sprites, the burden bear.

Hark, hark!
The watch-dogs bark:
Hark, hark! I hear
The strain of strutting chanticleer.

Ferd. Where should this music be? i’ the air, or th’ earth?
It sounds no more: and, sure, it waits upon
Some god o’ the island. Sitting on a bank,
Weeping again the King my father’s wreck,
This music crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury and my passion
With its sweet air: thence I have follow’d it,
Or it hath drawn me rather. But ’tis gone.
No, it begins again.

Ariel sings.

Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
comfort and bade them stand still. In fine, when they saw how they were deceived, they roared like bulls, and cryed upon their great devil Setebos, to help them.”

89 Soothed or charmed the raging waters into stillness or peace.
90 Passion is here used in its proper Latin sense of suffering.
Those are pearls that were his eyes:

Nothing of him that doth fade
But doth suffer a sea-change,
Into something rich and strange.

Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:

Burden.

Ding-dong.

Hark! now I hear them, — Ding-dong, bell.

Ferd. The ditty does remember my drown'd father.
This is no mortal business, nor no sound
That the Earth owes. I hear it now above me.

Pros. The fringed curtains of thine eye advance,
And say what thou see'st yond.

Mira. What is't? a spirit?

Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, sir,
It carries a brave form. But 'tis a spirit.

Pros. No, wench; it eats and sleeps, and hath such senses
As we have, such. This gallant which thou see'st
Was in the wreck; and, but he's something stain'd

91 Nothing fades without undergoing a sea-change. This use of but occurs repeatedly. So in Hamlet, i. 3: "Do not sleep but let me hear from you;" that is, "without letting me hear." See, also, Macbeth, page 99, note 6.

92 Owe is own, possess. The old form of the word was Owen. Abbott, in his Shakespeare Grammar, has the following: "In the general destruction of inflections which prevailed during the Elizabethan period, en was particularly discarded. So strong was the discarding tendency, that even the n in Owen, to possess, was dropped, and Shakespeare continually uses owe for Owen, or Own. The n has now been restored."

93 Advance, here, is raise or lift up. So in Romeo and Juliet, ii. 3: "Ere the Sun advance his burning eye." Especially used of lifting up military standards.

94 Brave, again, for fine or superb. See page 48, note 2.

95 Wench was often used thus as a term of playful familiarity, without implying any thing of reproach or contempt.
With grief, that's beauty's canker, thou mightst call him
A goodly person: he hath lost his fellows,
And strays about to find 'em.

_Mira._

I might call him
A thing divine; for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.

_PROS._ [Aside.] It goes on, I see,
As my soul prompts it.—Spirit, fine spirit! I'll free thee
Within two days for this.

_Ferd._

Most sure, the goddess
On whom these airs attend!—Vouchsafe my prayer
May know if you remain upon this island;
And that you will some good instruction give
How I may bear me here: my prime request,
Which I do last pronounce, is,—O you wonder!—
If you be maid or no?

_Mira._

No wonder, sir;
But certainly a maid.

_Ferd._

My language! Heavens!—
I am the best of them that speak this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.

_PROS._

How! the best?
What wert thou, if the King of Naples heard thee?

_Ferd._ A single thing, as I am now, that wonders

96 Shakespeare uses _canker_ in four distinct senses,—the _canker-worm_, the _dog-rose_, a malignant sore, _cancer_, and _rust_ or _tarnish_. Here it probably means the last; as in St. James, v. 3: "Your gold and silver is _cankered_; and the _rust_ of them shall be a witness against you."

97 Ferdinand has already spoken of Miranda as a goddess: he now asks, if she be a mortal; not a celestial being, but a maiden. Of course her answer is to be taken in the same sense as his question. The name _Miranda_ literally signifies _wonderful._

98 The Poet repeatedly uses _single_ for _weak_ or _feeble_; here, along with
To hear thee speak of Naples. He does hear me; And that he does I weep: myself am Naples; Who with mine eyes, ne'er since at ebb, beheld The King my father wreck'd.

_Mira._ Alack, for mercy!

_Ferd._ Yes, faith, and all his lords; the Duke of Milan And his brave son being twain.

_Prosp._ [Aside.] The Duke of Milan And his more braver daughter could control thee, If now 'twere fit to do't. At the first sight They have changed eyes. — Delicate Ariel, I'll set thee free for this! — A word, good sir; I fear you've done yourself some wrong: a word.

_Mira._ Why speaks my father so ungently? This Is the third man that e'er I saw; the first That e'er I sigh'd for: pity move my father To be inclined my way!

_Ferd._ O, if a virgin, And your affection not gone forth, I'll make you The Queen of Naples:

_Prosp._ Soft, sir! one word more.—

[Aside.] They're both in either's powers: but this swift business I must uneasy make, lest too light winning this, it has the further sense of solitary or companionless. Ferdinand supposes himself to be the only one saved of all that were in the ship.

99 This young man, the son of Antonio, nowhere appears in the play, nor is there any other mention of him.

100 To control was formerly used in the sense of to refute; from the French contre-roller, to exhibit a contrary account. Prospero means that he could refute what Ferdinand has just said about the Duke of Milan.

101 "Done wrong to your character, in claiming to be King of Naples." Or incurred the penalty of being a spy or an usurper, by assuming a title that does not belong to him.
Make the prize light. — One word more; I charge thee
That thou attend me: Thou dost here usurp
The name thou owest not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy, to win it
From me, the lord on't.

_Ferd._ No, as I'm a man.

_Mira._ There's nothing ill can dwell in such a temple:
If the ill spirit have so fair a house,
Good things will strive to dwell with't.

_Pro._ [To Ferd.] Follow me.—

Speak not you for him; he's a traitor.—Come;
I'll manacle thy neck and feet together:
Sea-water shalt thou drink; thy food shall be
The fresh-brook muscles, wither'd roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled: follow.

_Ferd._ No;

I will resist such entertainment, till
Mine enemy has more power.

_[He draws, and is charmed from moving._

_Mira._ O dear father,

Make not too rash a trial of him, for
He's gentle, and not fearful.

_Pro._ What, I say,
My fool my tutor! — Put thy sword up, traitor;

102 In this scene, as it proceeds, is displayed the impression made by Ferdinand and Miranda on each other; it is love at first sight,—"at the first sight they have changed eyes." Prospero's interruption of the courtship has often seemed to me to have no sufficient motive; still, his alleged reason, "llest too light winning make 'the prize light,' is enough for the ethereal connections of the romantic imagination, although it would not be so for the historical. — Coleridge.

103 This clearly means that Ferdinand is brave and high-spirited, so that, if pressed too hard, he will rather die than succumb. It is a good old notion that bravery and gentleness naturally go together.
Who maketh a show, but darest not strike, thy conscience
Is so possess’d with guilt: come from thy ward;
For I can here disarm thee with this stick,
And make thy weapon drop.

_Mira._ Beseech you, father!—

_Pros._ Hence! hang not on my garments.

_Mira._ Sir, have pity;

I’ll be his surety.

_Pros._ Silence! one word more Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. What!
An advocate for an impostor? hush!
Thou think’st there are no more such shapes as he,
Having seen but him and Caliban: foolish wench!
To th’ most of men this is a Caliban,
And they to him are angels.

_Mira._ My affections
Are, then, most humble; I have no ambition
To see a goodlier man.

_Pros._ [To Ferd.] Come on; obey:
Thy nerves are in their infancy again,
And have no vigour in them.

_Ferd._ So they are:
My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up.
My father’s loss, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends, and this man’s threats
To whom I am subdued, are light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day

104 _Ward_ is posture or attitude of defence. Ferdinand is standing with his sword drawn, and his body planted, ready for defending himself. So, in _1 Henry the Fourth_, ii. 4, Falstaff says, “Thou knowest my old _ward_: here I lay, and thus I bore my point.”

105 _Nerves_ for _sinews_; the two words being used indifferently in the Poet’s time. See _Hamlet_, page 80, note 20.
Behold this maid: all corners else o' the Earth
Let liberty make use of; space enough
Have I in such a prison.

Pro. [Aside.] It works.—[To Ferd.] Come on.—
Thou hast done well, fine Ariel!—Follow me.—
[To Ariel.] Hark, what thou else shalt do me.

Mira. Be of comfort;
My father's of a better nature, sir,
Than he appears by speech: this is unwonted
Which now came from him.

Pro. [To Ariel.] Thou shalt be as free
As mountain winds: but then exactly do
All points of my command.

Ari. To th' syllable,
Pro. Come, follow.—Speak not for him.
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Scene I.—Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and Others.

Gonza. Beseech you, sir, be merry: you have cause—
So have we all—of joy; for our escape
Is much beyond our loss. Our hint of woe
Is common; every day some sailor's wife,
The master of some merchant,
and the merchant,
Have just our theme of woe: but for the miracle—

106 "Be of comfort" is old language for be comforted.
1 It was usual to call a merchant-vessel a merchant; as we now say a merchant-man.
I mean our preservation — few in millions
Can speak like us: then wisely, good sir, weigh
Our sorrow with our comfort.

Alon. Pr'ythee, peace.
Sebas. He receives comfort like cold porridge.
Anto. The visitor\(^2\) will not give him o'er so.

Sebas. Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit; by-and-by it will strike.

Gonza. Sir,—
Sebas. One: — tell.\(^3\)
Gonza. — When every grief is entertain'd that's offer'd,
Comes to the entertainer —

Sebas. A dollar.
Gonza. Dolour comes to him, indeed: you have spoken truer than you purposed.
Sebas. You have taken it wiselier than I meant you should.

Gonza. Therefore, my lord,—
Anto. Fie, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue!
Alon. I pr'ythee, spare me.
Gonza. Well, I have done: but yet —
Sebas. He will be talking.
Anto. Which, of he or Adrian,\(^4\) for a good wager, first begins to crow?

\(^2\) He calls Gonzalo a visitor in allusion to the office of one who visits the sick or the afflicted, to give counsel and consolation. The caustic scoffing humour of Sebastian and Antonio, in this scene, is wisely conceived. See the Introduction, page 29.

\(^3\) Tell is count, or keep tally; referring to "the watch of his wit," which he was said to be "winding up," and which now begins to strike. See King Lear, page 115, note 10.

\(^4\) This, it appears, is an old mode of speech, which is now entirely obsolete. Shakespeare has it once again in A Midsummer-Night's Dream, iii. 2: "Now follow, if thou darest, to try whose right, of thine or mine, is most in Sebas. The old cock.
Anto. The cockerel.
Sebas. Done! The wager?
Anto. A laughter.
Sebas. A match!
Adri. Though this island seem to be desert,—
Sebas. Ha, ha, ha!—So, you’re paid.5
Adri.—uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible,— Sebas. Yet—
Adri.—yet—
Anto. He could not miss’t.
Adri.—it must needs be of subtle, tender, and delicate temperance.6
Anto. Temperance was a delicate wench.
Sebas. Ay, and a subtle; as he most learnedly delivered.
Adri. The air breathes upon us here most sweetly.
Sebas. As if it had lungs, and rotten ones.
Anto. Or as ’twere perfumed by a fen.
Gonza. Here is every thing advantageous to life.
Anto. True; save means to live.
Sebas. Of that there’s none, or little.
Gonza. How lush7 and lusty the grass looks! how green!
Anto. The ground, indeed, is tawny.

Helena," And Walker quotes an apposite passage from Sidney's Arcadia: "The question arising, who should be the first to fight against Phalantus, of the black or the ill-apparelled knight," &c.
5 A laugh having been agreed upon as the wager, and Sebastian having lost, he now pays with a laugh.
6 By temperance Adrian means temperature, and Antonio plays upon the word; alluding, perhaps, to the Puritan custom of bestowing the names of the cardinal virtues upon their children.
7 Lush is juicy, succulent,—luxuriant.
Sebas. With an eye of green in't.\textsuperscript{8}
Anto. He misses not much.
Sebas. No; he doth but mistake the truth totally.
Gonza. But the rarity of it is,—which is indeed almost beyond credit,— Sebas. As many vouch'd rarities are.
Gonza. —that our garments, being, as they were, drenched in the sea, hold, notwithstanding, their freshness and gloss, being rather new-dyed than stain'd with salt water.
Anto. If but one of his pockets could speak, would it not say he lies?
Sebas. Ay, or very falsely pocket up his report.
Gonza. Methinks our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first in Afric, at the marriage of the King's fair daughter Claribel to the King of Tunis.
Sebas. 'Twas a sweet marriage, and we prosper well in our return.
Adri. Tunis was never graced before with such a paragon to\textsuperscript{9} their Queen.
Gonza. Not since widow Dido's time.
Anto. Widow? a pox o' that! How came that widow in? Widow Dido!
Sebas. What if he had said widower Æneas too? Good Lord, how you take it!
Adri. Widow Dido, said you? you make me study of that: she was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

\textsuperscript{8} A tint or shade of green. So in Sandy's Travels: "Cloth of silver, tissued with an eye of green;" and Bayle says: "Red with an eye of blue makes a purple."

\textsuperscript{9} To was continually used in such cases where we should use for or as. So in the Marriage Office of the Church: "Wilt thou have this woman to thy wedded wife?" Also, in St. Mark, xii. 23: "The seven had her to wife."
Gonza. This Tunis, sir, was Carthage.
Adri. Carthage!
Gonza. I assure you, Carthage.
Anto. His word is more than the miraculous harp.¹⁰
Sebas. He hath raised the wall and houses too.
Anto. What impossible matter will he make easy next?
Sebas. I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.
Anto. And, sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.
Alon. Ah!
Anto. Why, in good time.
Gonza. Sir, we were talking that our garments seem now as fresh as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now Queen.
Anto. And the rarest that e’er came there.
Sebas. Bate, I beseech you, widow Dido.
Gonza. Is not, sir, my doublet as fresh as the first day I wore it? I mean, in a sort.
Anto. That sort was well fish’d for.¹¹
Gonza. When I wore it at your daughter’s marriage?
Alon. You cram these words into mine ears against The stomach of my sense.¹² Would I had never

¹¹ A punning allusion, probably, to one of the meanings of sort, which was lot or portion; from the Latin sors.

¹² That is, “when the state of my feelings does not relish them, or has no appetite for them.” Stomach for appetite occurs repeatedly.
Married my daughter there! for, coming thence,
My son is lost; and, in my rate,\textsuperscript{13} she too,
Who is so far from Italy removed,
I ne'er again shall see her. O thou mine heir
Of Naples and of Milan, what strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee?

Fran. Sir, he may live:
I saw him beat the surges under him,
And ride upon their backs; he trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted
The surge most swoln that met him: his bold head
'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty stroke
To th' shore, that o'er his\textsuperscript{14} wave-worn basis bow'd,
As\textsuperscript{15} stooping to relieve him: I not doubt
He came alive to land.

Alon. No, no; he's gone.

Sebas. Sir, you may thank yourself for this great loss,
That would not bless our Europe with your daughter,
But rather lose her to an African;
Where she at least is banish'd from your eye,
Who\textsuperscript{16} hath cause to wet the grief on't.

\textsuperscript{13} Rate for reckoning, account, or estimation.
\textsuperscript{14} His for its, referring to shore. In the Poet's time its was not an accepted word; it was then just creeping into use; and he has it occasionally, especially in his later plays; as it occurs once or twice in this play. It does not occur once in the Bible as printed in 1611.
\textsuperscript{15} Here as is put for as if; a very frequent usage with the Poet, as also with other writers of the time.
\textsuperscript{16} Who and which were used indifferently both of persons and things. Here who refers to eye. And the meaning probably is, "your eye, which hath cause to sprinkle or water your grief with tears." This would of course make the grief grow stronger. "The grief on't" is the grief arising from it or out of it; that is, from the loss or banishment of Claribel.
Alon. Pr'ythee, peace.

Sebas. You were kneel'd to, and importuned otherwise, By all of us; and the fair soul herself Weigh'd, between loathness and obedience, at Which end the beam should bow. We've lost your son, I fear, for ever: Milan and Naples have More widows in them of this business' making Than we bring men to comfort them: the fault's Your own.

Alon. So is the dear'st o' the loss.

Gonza. My lord Sebastian

The truth you speak doth lack some gentleness, And time to speak it in: you rub the sore, When you should bring the plaster.

Sebas. Very well.

Anto. And most chirurgeonly.

Gonza. It is foul weather in us all, good sir, When you are cloudy.

Sebas. Foul weather!

Anto. Very foul.

Gonza. Had I plantation of this isle, my lord, —

Anto. He'd sow't with nettle-seed.

17 Hesitated, or stood in doubt, between reluctance and obedience, which way the balance should turn or incline. To weigh is to deliberate, and hence to pause, to be in suspense, or to suspend action.

18 Dear was used of any thing that causes strong feeling, whether of pleasure or of pain; as it hurts us to lose that which is dear to us. So that here the sense is, the worst or heaviest of the loss.

19 Chirurgeon is the old word, which has got transformed into surgeon.

20 The meaning is, “your gloom makes us all gloomy.” A cloud in the face is a common metaphor both for anger and for sorrow.

21 In Shakespeare's time a plantation meant a colony, and was so used of the American colonies. (Here plantation is a “verbal noun,” and means the colonizing.)
Sebas. Or docks, or mallows.

Gonza. — And were the King on't, what would I do?
Sebas. 'Scape being drunk for want of wine.

Gonza. I' the commonwealth I would by contraries Execute all things: for no kind of traffic Would I admit; no name of magistrate; Letters should not be known; riches, poverty, And use of service, none; contract, succession, Bourn, bound of land, tilth,\(^{22}\) vineyard, none; No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil; No occupation; all men idle, all, And women too, but innocent and pure; No sovereignty: —

Sebas. Yet he would be king on't.

Anto. The latter end of his commonwealth forgets the beginning.

Gonza. — All things in common Nature should produce Without sweat or endeavour: treason, felony, Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine,\(^{23}\) Would I not have; but Nature should bring forth, Of its own kind, all foison,\(^{24}\) all abundance, To feed my innocent people.

Sebas. No marrying 'mong his subjects?
Anto. None, man; all idle, — trulls and knaves.

\(^{22}\) Succession is the tenure of property by inheritance, as the son succeeds the father. — Bourn is boundary or limit. Properly it means a stream of water, river, rivulet, or brook; these being the most natural boundaries of landed property. — Tilth is tillage: also used of land tilled, or prepared for sowing. So in Measure for Measure, iv. i: "Our corn's to reap, for yet our tilth's to sow."

\(^{23}\) Engine was applied to any kind of machine: here it probably means furniture of war.

\(^{24}\) Foison is an old word for plenty or abundance of provision, especially of the fruits of the soil. Often used so by the Poet.
Gonza. I would with such perfection govern, sir,
T’ excel the golden age.25
Sebas. God save his Majesty!
Anto. Long live Gonzalo!
Gonza. And,—do you mark me, sir?—
Alon. Pr’ythee, no more: thou dost talk nothing to me.
Gonza. I do well believe your Highness; and did it to minister occasion to these gentlemen, who are of such sensible26 and nimble lungs, that they always use to laugh at nothing.
Anto. ’Twas you we laugh’d at.
Gonza. Who in this kind of merry fooling am nothing to you:27 so you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.
Anto. What a blow was there given!
Sebas. An it had not fallen flat-long.28
Gonza. You are gentlemen of brave mettle;29 you would lift the Moon out of her sphere, if she would30 continue in it five weeks without changing.

25 "The golden age" is that fabulous period in "the dark backward of time" when men knew nothing of sin and sorrow, and were so wise and good as to have no need of laws and government. Milton, in his Ode on the Nativity, has "Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold."

26 Sensible for sensitive or ticklish. So in Coriolanus, i. 3: "I would your cambric were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity." See, also, Hamlet, page 109, note 44.

27 Nothing in comparison with you. So the Poet often uses to.

28 The idea is of a sword handled so awkwardly as to hit with the side, and not with the edge.

29 Brave mettle is high, glorious, or magnificent spirit. The Poet often has mettle in that sense.—Sphere, in the next line, is orbit.

30 Our present usage requires should. In Shakespeare’s time, the auxiliaries could, should, and would were often used indiscriminately, as were also shall and will. So a little further on: "Methinks I see it in thy face, what thou shouldst be"; shouldst for wouldst. Again, later in this scene, "should not upbraid our course"; should for would. Also, "who shall be of as little memory"; shall for will.
Enter Ariel, invisible, playing solemn music.

Sebas. We would so, and then go a-bat-fowling.\(^{31}\)

Anto. Nay, good my lord, be not angry.

Gonza. No, I warrant you; I will not adventure my discretion\(^{32}\) so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep? for I am very heavy.

Anto. Go sleep, and hear us not.

[All sleep but Alon., Sebas., and Anto.

Alon. What, all so soon asleep! I wish mine eyes Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts: I find They are inclined to do so.

Sebas. Please you, sir, Do not omit the heavy offer of it:\(^{33}\) It seldom visits sorrow; when it doth, It is a comforter.

Anto. We two, my lord, Will guard your person while you take your rest, And watch your safety.

Sebas. What a strange drowsiness possesses them!

Anto. It is the quality o' the climate.

Sebas. Why Doth it not, then, our eyelids sink? I find not

\(^{31}\) Bat-fowling was a term used of catching birds in the night. Fielding, in Joseph Andrews, calls it bird-batting, and says "it is performed by holding a large clap-net before a lantern, and at the same time beating the bushes; for the birds, when they are disturbed from their places of rest or roost, immediately make to the light, and so are enticed within the net."

\(^{32}\) That is, "hazard my character for discretion, or put it in peril."

\(^{33}\) "Do not slight or neglect the offer of sleep which it holds out," or "when it offers to make you sleepy." Heavy is here used proleptically, or anticipatively. See Macbeth, page 113, note 11.
Myself disposed to sleep.

Anto. Nor I; my spirits are nimble. They fell together all, as by consent; They dropp’d, as by a thunder-stroke. What might, Worthy Sebastian, O, what might! No more: And yet methinks I see it in thy face, What thou shouldst be: th’ occasion speaks thee; and My strong imagination sees a crown Dropping upon thy head.

Sebas. What, art thou waking?

Anto. Do you not hear me speak?

Sebas. I do; and surely It is a sleepy language, and thou speak’st Out of thy sleep. What is it thou didst say? This is a strange repose, to be asleep With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving, And yet so fast asleep.

Anto. Noble Sebastian, Thou lett’st thy fortune sleep,—die rather; wink’st Whiles thou art waking.

Sebas. Thou dost snore distinctly; There’s meaning in thy snores.

Anto. I am more serious than my custom: you Must be so too, if heed me; which to do Trebles thee o’er.

34 “What might you be!” is probably the meaning.
35 Reveals or proclaims thee. Such an opportunity kindles the devil in Sebastian, and makes his ambitious thoughts legible in his face. So in Macbeth, i. 5: “Your face is as a book where men may read strange matters.”
36 “Closest thine eyes as if asleep while thou art awake.” While, whiles, and whilst were used indifferently.
37 “The doing of which will make thee thrice what thou art now.”
Sebas. Well, I am standing water.
Anto. I'll teach you how to flow.
Sebas. Do so: to ebb

Hereditary sloth instructs me.
Anto. O,
If you but knew how you the purpose cherish
While you mock it! how, in stripping it,
You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed,
Most often do so near the bottom run
By their own fear or sloth.
Sebas. Pr'ythee, say on:
The setting of thine eye and cheek proclaim
A matter from thee; and a birth indeed
Which throes thee much to yield.

Anto. Thus, sir:
Although this lord of weak remembrance, this,
Who shall be of as little memory
When he is earth'd, hath here almost persuaded —
For he's a spirit of persuasion, only
Professes to persuade — the King his son's alive,
'Tis as impossible that he's undrown'd

38 Water standing between ebb and flow, and so ready to be moved in either direction. So in Twelfth Night, i. 5: "'Tis with him e'en standing water between boy and man."
39 Sebastian shows that he both takes and welcomes Antonio's suggestion, by his making it a theme of jest; and the more he thus denudes the hint of obscurity by playing with it, the more he clothes it with his own approval.—"Ebbing men" are men whose fortunes are ebbing away or declining.
40 "In the yielding of which you struggle very hard, and suffer much pain." — Matter, here, is something of vast import.
41 Will be as little remembered, or as quickly forgotten, as he is apt to forget. Weak remembrance means feeble memory. Francisco is the lord referred to.—Shall for will, as noted a little before.
As he that sleeps here swims.

Sebas. I have no hope
That he’s undrown’d.

Anto. O, out of that no hope
What great hope have you! no hope that way—is Another way so high a hope, that even Ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond,—
But doubt discovery there. Will you grant with me
That Ferdinand is drown’d?

Sebas. He’s gone.

Anto. Then, tell me,
Who’s the next heir of Naples?

Sebas. Claribel.

Anto. She that is Queen of Tunis; she that dwells
Ten leagues beyond man’s life; she that from Naples
Can have no note, unless the Sun were post,—
The Man-i’-the-moon’s too slow,—till new-born chins
Be rough and razorable. She ’twas for whom we
All were sea-swallow’d, though some cast again;

42 Cannot pierce so much beyond as may be measured by a wink of the eye; wink meaning the same as jot or atom. Probably all are familiar with the word in that sense.—The last clause is obscure, or worse: probably, if the text be right, the force of cannot was meant to be continued over But doubt. See Critical Notes.

43 Beyond a lifetime of travelling. Of course this passage is a piece of intentional hyperbole; and Sebastian shows that he takes it so, by exclaiming, “What stuff is this!”

44 Note for knowledge or notice. See King Lear, page 128, note 3.

45 For whom is here equivalent to because of whom, or on whose account. For is often used so. Antonio means, apparently, to imply that, inasmuch as Claribel has been the occasion of what has befallen them, they need not scruple to cut her off from the Neapolitan throne. And he goes on to intimate that, by the recent strange events, Sebastian and himself are marked out, as by destiny, for some mighty achievement or some peerless honour.

46 The image is of being swallowed by the sea, and then cast up, or cast
And, by that destiny, to perform an act
Whereof what’s past is prologue; what to come,
In yours and my discharge.

Sebas. What stuff is this! How say you?
’Tis true, my brother’s daughter’s Queen of Tunis;
So is she heir of Naples; ’twixt which regions
There is some space.

Ant. A space whose every cubit
Seems to cry out, How shalt thou, Claribel,
Measure us back to Naples? Keep in Tunis,
And let Sebastian wake! Say, this were death
That now hath seized them; why, they were no worse
Than now they are. There be that can rule Naples
As well as he that sleeps; lords that can prate
As amply and unnecessarily
As this Gonzalo: I myself could make
A chough of as deep chat. O, that you bore
The mind that I do! what a sleep were this
For your advancement! Do you understand me?

Sebas. Methinks I do.

Ant. And how does your content
Tender your own good fortune?

Sebas. I remember
You did supplant your brother Prospero.

Ant. True:

ashore. — In the next line, “by that destiny” is by the same destiny through which they have so miraculously escaped drowning.

47 “Measure the distance back from Naples to us;” or “return to us.”

48 Could produce, breed, or train a parrot to talk as wisely. A chough is a bird of the jackdaw kind.

49 Obscure, again. But the meaning seems to be, “How does your present contentment, that is, apathy or indifference, regard or look out for your own advantage or interest?” To tender a thing is to take care of it, or be careful for it. See Hamlet, page 73, note 27.
SCENE I.  THE TEMPEST. 89

And look how well my garments sit upon me; Much feater \(^{50}\) than before: my brother's servants Were then my fellows; now they are my men.

Sebas. But, for your conscience —

Anto. Ay, sir; and where lies that? if 'twere a kibe, \(^{51}\) 'Twould put me to my slipper: but I feel not This deity in my bosom: twenty consciences, That stand 'twixt me and Milan, candied \(^{52}\) be they, And melt, ere they molest! Here lies your brother, No better than the earth he lies upon, If he were that which now he's like; whom I, With this obedient steel, three inches of it, Can lay to bed for ever; whiles you, doing thus, To the perpetual wink for aye might put This ancient morsel, this Sir Prudence, who Should not upbraid our course. For all the rest, They'll take suggestion \(^{53}\) as a cat laps milk; They'll tell \(^{54}\) the clock to any business that We say befits the hour.

Sebas. Thy case, dear friend, Shall be my precedent; as thou gott'st Milan, \(^{50}\) Feater is more finely, or more becomingly.—Fellows, in the next line, is equals. The word is often used in that sense.

\(^{51}\) The Poet has kibe several times for the well-known heel-sore, an ulcerated chilblain.

\(^{52}\) Candied, here, is congealed, or crystallized. So in Timon of Athens, iv. 3: "Will the cold brook, candied with ice, cauldle thy morning taste?"

\(^{53}\) Suggest and its derivatives were often used in the sense of to tempt. Thus Shakespeare has such phrases as "tender youth is soon suggested," and "what serpent hath suggested thee." The meaning of the text is, "They'll fall in with any temptation to villainy"; they referring to the other lords present.

\(^{54}\) Tell, again, for count. The meaning is, "They'll speak whatever words we choose to have them speak," or "put into their mouths."
I'll come by Naples. Draw thy sword: one stroke Shall free thee from the tribute which thou pay'st; And I the King shall love thee.

Anto. Draw together; And when I rear my hand, do you the like, To fall it on Gonzalo.

Sebas. O, but one word.

[They converse apart.

Music. Re-enter Ariel, invisible.

Ari. My master through his art foresees the danger That you, his friend, are in; and sends me forth — For else his project dies — to keep thee living.

[In Gonzalo's ear.

While you here do snoring lie, Open-eyed conspiracy His time doth take. If of life you keep a care, Shake off slumber, and beware: Awake! awake!

Anto. Then let us both be sudden.

Gonza. [Waking.] Now, good angels Preserve the King! — [To Sebas. and Anto.] Why, how now! — [To Alon.] Ho, awake! — [To Sebas. and Anto.] Why are you drawn? wherefore this ghastly looking?

Alon. [Waking.] What's the matter?

Sebas. While we stood here securing your repose, Even now, we heard a hollow burst of bellowing Like bulls, or rather lions: didn't not wake you? It struck mine ear most terribly.

55 Shall for will, again. See page 86, note 41.
Alon. I heard nothing.

Anto. O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear,
To make an earthquake! sure, it was the roar
Of a whole herd of lions.

Alon. Heard you this, Gonzalo?

Gonza. Upon mine honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me:
I shaked you, sir, and cried: as mine eyes open'd,
I saw their weapons drawn: there was a noise,
That's verity. 'Tis best we stand upon our guard,
Or that we quit this place: let's draw our weapons.

Alon. Lead off this ground; and let's make further search
For my poor son.

Gonza. Heavens keep him from these beasts!
For he is, sure, i' the island.

Alon. Lead away.

[Exit with the others.

Ari. Prospero my lord shall know what I have done:—
So, King, go safely on to seek thy son.

[Exit.

SCENE II. — Another part of the Island.

Enter Caliban, with a burden of wood. A noise of Thunder heard.

Cal. All the infections that the Sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prosper fall, and make him
By inch-meal¹ a disease! His spirits hear me,
And yet I needs must curse. But they'll nor pinch,
Fright me with urchin-shows,² pitch me i' the mire,

¹ Inch-meal and limb-meal were used just as we use piece-meal.
² Urchin-shows are fairy-shows; as urchin was the name of a certain description of fairies. See page 66, note 80.
Nor lead me, like a fire-brand,\textsuperscript{3} in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid 'em: but
For every trifle are they set upon me;
Sometime\textsuperscript{4} like apes, that mow\textsuperscript{5} and chatter at me,
And after bite me; then like hedgehogs, which Lie tumbling in my barefoot way, and mount
Their pricks\textsuperscript{6} at my foot-fall; sometime am I
All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness. Lo, now, lo!
Here comes a spirit of his; and to torment me
For bringing wood in slowly. I'll fall flat;
Perchance he will not mind me.

\textit{Enter Trinculo.}

\textit{Trin.} Here's neither bush nor shrub, to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing; I hear it sing i' the wind: yond same black cloud, yond huge one, looks like a foul bombard\textsuperscript{7} that would shed his liquor. If it should thunder as it did before, I know not where to hide my head:
yond same cloud cannot choose but fall by pailfuls.—What have we here? a man or a fish? Dead or alive? A fish: he smells like a fish; a very ancient and fish-like smell; a kind of not-of-the-newest poor-john.\textsuperscript{8} A strange fish! Were I in England now, as once I was, and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver: there would this monster make a man; any strange beast there

\textsuperscript{3} The \textit{ignis fatuus} was thought to be the work of naughty spirits.

\textsuperscript{4} \textit{Sometime} and \textit{sometimes} were used indiscriminately.

\textsuperscript{5} To \textit{mow} is to \textit{make mouths}. So Nash's \textit{Pierce Penniless}: “Nobody at home but an ape, that sat in the porch, and made mops and \textit{mows} at him.”

\textsuperscript{6} \textit{Pricks} is the ancient word for \textit{prickles}.

\textsuperscript{7} A \textit{bombard} is a black jack of leather, to hold beer, &c.

\textsuperscript{8} \textit{Poor-john} is an old name for \textit{hake} salted and dried.
makes a man: when they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Legg'd like a man! and his fins like arms! Warm, o' my troth! I do now let loose my opinion; hold it no longer: this is no fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffered by a thunderbolt. [Thunder.] Alas, the storm is come again! my best way is to creep under his gaberdine; there is no other shelter hereabout: misery acquaints a man with strange bed-fellows. I will here shroud till the dregs of the storm be past.

[Creeps under Caliban’s garment.]

Enter Stephano, singing; a bottle in his hand.

Steph. I shall no more to sea, to sea,
Here shall I die ashore; —
This is a very scurvy tune to sing at a man’s funeral: well, here’s my comfort. [Drinks.

[Sings.] The master, the swabber,\textsuperscript{11} the boatswain, and I,
The gunner, and his mate,
Loved Mall, Meg, and Marian, and Margery,
But none of us cared for Kate;
For she had a tongue with a tang,\textsuperscript{12}
Would cry to a sailor, Go hang!
She loved not the savour of tar nor of pitch:
Then to sea, boys, and let her go hang!

\textsuperscript{9} Sets a man up, or makes his fortune. The phrase was often used thus. So in A Midsummer-Night’s Dream, iv. 2: “If our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.”

\textsuperscript{10} A gaberdine was a coarse outer garment. “A shepherd’s pelt, frock, or gaberdine, such a coarse long jacket as our porters wear over the rest of their garments,” says Cotgrave. “A kind of rough cassock or frock like an Irish mantle,” says Philips.

\textsuperscript{11} A swabber is one whose special business it is to sweep, mop, or swab the deck of a ship.

\textsuperscript{12} Tang was used of what has a pungent or biting taste or flavour.
This is a scurvy tune too: but here's my comfort. [Drinks.

_Cal._ Do not torment me: — _O_!

_Steph._ What's the matter? Have we devils here? Do you put tricks upon's with savages and men of Inde, ha? I have not 'scape drowing, to be afeard now of your four legs; for it hath been said, As proper a man as ever went on four legs cannot make him give ground; and it shall be said so again, while Stephano breathes at's nostrils.

_Cal._ The spirit torments me: — _O_!

_Steph._ This is some monster of the isle with four legs, who hath got, as I take it, an ague. Where the Devil should he learn our language? I will give him some relief, if it be but for that. If I can recover him, and keep him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever trod on neat's-leather.

_Cal._ Do not torment me, pr'ythee: I'll bring my wood home faster.

_Steph._ He's in his fit now, and does not talk after the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle: if he have never drunk wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. If I can recover him, and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him: he shall pay for him that hath him, and that soundly.

_Cal._ Thou dost me yet but little hurt; Thou wilt anon, I know it by thy trembling: Now Prosper works upon thee.

_Steph._ Come on your ways; open your mouth; here is

13 Alluding, probably, to the impostures practised by showmen, who often exhibited sham wonders pretended to be brought from America. _Inde_ for _India_, East or West.

14 _Neat_ is an old epithet for all cattle of the bovine genus. So that _neat's-leather_ is _cowhide_ or _calfskin_. So in _The Winter's Tale_, i. 2: "And yet the steer, the heifer, and the calf are all called _neat._"

15 A piece of vulgar irony, meaning, "I'll take as much as I can get."
that which will give language to you, cat: open your mouth; this will shake your shaking, I can tell you, and that soundly: \[Gives him drink.\] you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chops again. \[Gives him more drink.\]

Trin. I should know that voice: it should be— but he is drown'd; and these are devils:—O, defend me!

Steph. Four legs, and two voices,—a most delicate monster? His forward voice now is to speak well of his friend; his backward voice is to utter foul speeches and to detract. If all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will help his ague: \[Gives him drink.\]—Come,—Amen! I will pour some in thy other mouth.

Trin. Stephano!

Steph. Doth thy other mouth call me?—Mercy, mercy! This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; I have no long spoon.

Trin. Stephano!—If thou be'st Stephano, touch me, and speak to me; for I am Trinculo,—be not afeard,—thy good friend Trinculo.

Steph. If thou be'st Trinculo, come forth: I'll pull thee by the lesser legs: if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. \[Pulls TRINCULO out.\] Thou art very Trinculo indeed! How camest thou to be the siege of this moon-calf?

16 Shakespeare gives his characters appropriate language: "They belch forth proverbs in their drink," "Good liquor will make a cat speak," and "He who eats with the devil had need of a long spoon."

17 Stephano is frightened, and put to his religion; and Amen! is the best he can do towards praying.

18 That is, the real or veritable Trinculo. The Poet often has very so.

19 Moon-calf was an imaginary monster, supposed to be generated or misshapen through lunar influence.) So in Holland's Pliny: "A false conception called mola, that is a moone-calfe; that is to say, a lump of flesh without shape, without life." —Siege is an old word for seat. So in Measure for Measure, iv. 2: "Upon the very siege of justice."
Trin. I took him to be kill’d with a thunder-stroke. But art thou not drown’d, Stephano? I hope, now, thou art not drown’d? Is the storm overblown? I hid me under the dead moon-calf’s gaberidine for fear of the storm. And art thou living, Stephano? O Stephano, two Neapolitans ’scaped!

Steph. Pr’ythee, do not turn me about; my stomach is not constant.

Cal. [Aside.] These be fine things, an if they be not sprites. That’s a brave god, and bears celestial liquor: I will kneel to him.

Steph. How didst thou ’scape? How camest thou hither? swear, by this bottle, how thou camest hither. I escaped upon a butt of sack, which the sailors heaved o’erboard, by this bottle! which I made of the bark of a tree with mine own hands, since I was cast ashore.

Cal. I’ll swear, upon that bottle, to be thy True subject; for the liquor is not earthly.

Steph. Here; swear, man, how thou escapedst.

Trin. Swam ashore, man, like a duck: I can swim like a duck, I’ll be sworn.

Steph. Here, kiss the book. [Gives him drink.] Though thou canst swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose.

Trin. O Stephano, hast any more of this?

Steph. The whole butt, man: my cellar is in a rock by the sea-side, where my wine is hid. — How now, moon-calf! how does thine ague?

Cal. Hast thou not dropp’d from heaven?

20 In old English, if, an, and an if are exactly equivalent expressions; the latter being merely a reduplication; though it sometimes has the force of even if. See Hamlet, page 89, note 34.
SCENE II.

THE TEMPEST.

Steph. Out o' the Moon, I do assure thee: I was the Man-i'-the-moon when time was.

Cal. I've seen thee in her, and I do adore thee:
My mistress show'd me thee, and thy dog, and thy bush.

Steph. Come, swear to that; kiss the book: I will furnish it anon with new contents: swear.
[ Gives Caliban drink. ]

Trin. By this good light, this is a very shallow monster!
— I afeard of him! — a very weak monster! — The Man-i'-the-moon! — a most poor credulous monster! — Well drawn, monster, in good sooth.

Cal. I'll show thee every fertile inch o' the island;
And I will kiss thy foot: I pr'ythee, be my god.

Trin. By this light, a most perfidious and 'drunken monster! when his god's asleep, he'll rob his bottle.

Cal. I'll kiss thy foot; I'll swear myself thy subject.

Steph. Come on then; down, and swear.

Trin. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster. A most scurvy monster! I could find in my heart to beat him, —

Steph. Come, kiss.
[ Gives Caliban drink. ]

Trin. — but that the poor monster's in drink: an abominable monster!

Cal. I'll show thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee berries; I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough.
A plague upon the tyrant that I serve!
I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee,
Thou wondrous man.

21 So in A Midsummer-Night's Dream, v. i: "This man, with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn, presenteth moonshine."

22 Well drawn probably means that Caliban has taken a large draught of the liquor; as we should say, a bumper.— "In good sooth," sooth is the same as truth. So soothsayer originally meant a truth-speaker.

23 That is, will steal the liquor out of his bottle.
Trin. A most ridiculous monster, to make a wonder of a poor drunkard!

Cal. I pr'ythee, let me bring thee where crabs grow;
And I with my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts;\(^24\)
Show thee a jay's nest, and instruct thee how
To snare the nimble marmozet; I'll bring thee
To clustering filberts, and sometimes I'll get thee
Young staniels\(^25\) from the rock. Wilt thou go with me?

Steph. I pr'ythee now, lead the way without any more talking.—Trinculo, the King and all our company else being drown'd, we will inherit here. Here, bear my bottle: fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by-and-by again.

Cal. \([\text{Sings drunkenly.}]\) Farewell, master; farewell, farewell!

Trin. A howling monster; a drunken monster!

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish;
Nor fetch in firing at requiring;
Nor scrape trencher, nor wash dish:
'Ban, 'Ban, Ca—Caliban
Has a new master; get a new man.

Freedom, hey-day, hey-day, freedom! freedom, hey-day, freedom!

Steph. O brave monster! lead the way. \([\text{Exeunt.}]\)

\(^24\) Pig-nuts are probably much the same as what we call ground-nuts,—a small bulbous root growing wild.

\(^25\) The staniel is a species of hawk, also called kestril; a "beautiful species," says Montagu. See Critical Notes.
ACT III.

SCENE I. — Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Ferdinand, bearing a log.

_Ferd._ There be some sports are painful, and their labour Delight in them sets off:¹ some kinds of baseness Are nobly undergone; and most poor matters Point to rich ends. This my mean task would be As heavy to me as 'tis odious, but The mistress which I serve quickens what's dead, And makes my labours pleasures: O, she is Ten times more gentle than her father's crabbed, And he's composed of harshness. I must remove Some thousands of these logs, and pile them up, Upon a sore injunction: my sweet mistress Weeps when she sees me work; and says such baseness Had never like executor. I forget: But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my labour; Most busy when I do it least.²

¹ The delight we take in those painful sports offsets or compensates the exertion they put us to. A similar thought occurs in Macbeth: "The labour we delight in physics pain."

² That is, "I being most busy when I am least occupied." The sense of the two lines appears to be, "The sweet thoughts attending my labour, and springing from what Miranda is thereby moved to say, make even the labour itself refreshing to me; so that I am happiest when I work hardest, and most weary when working least." And Ferdinand "forgets" his task, or loses all sense of its irksomeness, in the pleasantness of his thoughts. The passage is not so very dark to those who have had their labour sweetened to them by thoughts of the dear ones for whom they were working. "And Jacob served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her." See Critical Notes.
Enter Miranda; and Prospero behind.

Mira. Alas, now, pray you, Work not so hard: I would the lightning had Burnt up those logs that you’re enjoin’d to pile! Pray, set it down, and rest you: when this burns, 'Twill weep for having wearied you. My father Is hard at study; pray now, rest yourself: He’s safe for these three hours.

Ferd. O most dear mistress, The Sun will set before I shall discharge What I must strive to do.

Mira. If you’ll sit down, I’ll bear your logs the while: pray, give me that; I’ll carry’t to the pile.

Ferd. No, precious creature; I’d rather crack my sinews, break my back, Than you should such dishonour undergo, While I sit lazy by.

Mira. It would become me As well as it does you: and I should do it With much more ease; for my good will is to it, And yours it is against.

Pros. [Aside.] Poor worm, thou art infected! This visitation shows it.

Mira. You look wearily.

Ferd. No, noble mistress; 'tis fresh morning with me When you are by at night. I do beseech you,— Chiefly that I might set it in my prayers,— What is your name?

Mira. Miranda:—O my father, I've broke your hest to say so!

Ferd. Admired Miranda!
Indeed the top of admiration; worth
What's dearest to the world! Full many a lady
I've eyed with best regard; and many a time
The harmony of their tongues hath into bondage
Brought my too diligent ear: for several virtues
Have I liked several women; never any
With so full soul, but some defect in her
Did quarrel with the noblest grace she owed,
And put it to the foil: but you, O you,
So perfect and so peerless, are created
Of every creature's best!

_Mira._ I do not know:
One of my sex; no woman's face remember,
Save, from my glass, mine own; nor have I seen
More that I may call men, than you, good friend,
And my dear father: how features are abroad,
I'm skilless of; but, by my modesty,—
The jewel in my dower,—I would not wish
Any companion in the world but you;
Nor can imagination form a shape,
Besides yourself, to like of. But I prattle
Something too wildly, and my father's precepts
I therein do forget.

_Ferd._ I am, in my condition,
A prince, Miranda; I do think, a king,—
I would, not so! — and would no more endure
This wooden slavery than to suffer
The flesh-fly blow[^4] my mouth. Hear my soul speak:

[^3] "Put it to the foil" means, apparently, compel it to _fight_, or to _stand on its defence_; _foil_ being often used as a general term for weapons of the sword kind. Here, as usual, _owed_ is _owned._

[^4] The _flesh-fly_ is the fly that _blows_ dead flesh, that is, lays maggot-eggs upon it, and so hastens its putrefaction.
The very instant that I saw you, did
My heart fly to your service; there resides,
To make me slave to it; and for your sake
Am I this patient log-man.

Mira. Do you love me?

Ferd. O Heaven, O Earth, bear witness to this sound,
And crown what I profess with kind event,
If I speak true! if hollowly, invert
What best is boded me to mischief! I,
Beyond all limit of what else i' the world,
Do love, prize, honour you.

Mira. I am a fool
To weep at what I'm glad of.

Pros. [Aside.] Fair encounter
Of two most rare affections! Heavens rain grace
On that which breeds between them!

Ferd. Wherefore weep you?

Mira. At mine unworthiness, that dare not offer
What I desire to give; and much less take
What I shall die to want. But this is trifling;
And all the more it seeks to hide itself,
The bigger bulk it shows. Hence, bashful cunning!
And prompt me, plain and holy innocence!
I am your wife, if you will marry me;
If not, I'll die your maid: to be your fellow
You may deny me; but I'll be your servant,

5 "What else" for whatsoever else. The Poet has many instances of relative pronouns thus used indefinitely. So in King Lear, v. 3: "What in the world he is that names me traitor, villain-like he lies." And in Othello,
iii. 3: "Who steals my purse steals trash."

6 Die from wanting, or by wanting. Another gerundial infinitive. We have a like expression in Much Ado: "You kill me to deny it."

7 Fellow for companion or equal, as before. See page 89, note 50.
Whether you will or no.

_Ferd._ My mistress, dearest,

And I thus humble ever.

_Mira._ My husband, then?

_Ferd._ Ay, with a heart as willing
As bondage e'er of freedom: \(^8\) here's my hand.

_Mira._ And mine, with my heart in't: and now farewell
Till half an hour hence.

_Ferd._ A thousand thousand! \(^9\)

[Exeunt Ferdinand and Miranda.

_Prosp._ So glad of this as they, I cannot be,
Who am surprised withal; \(^10\) but my rejoicing
At nothing can be more. I'll to my book;
For yet, ere supper-time, must I perform
Much business appertaining.

\(^8\) The abstract for the concrete. “I accept you for my wife as willingly as ever a bondman accepted of freedom.”

\(^9\) Meaning a thousand thousand _farewells_; this word being taken literally, like the Latin _bene vale_.—Coleridge comments on this sweet scene as follows: “The whole courting-scene, in the beginning of the third Act, is a masterpiece; and the first dawn of disobedience in the mind of Miranda to the command of her father is very finely drawn, so as to seem the working of the Scriptural command, _Thou shalt leave father and mother_, &c. O, with what exquisite purity this scene is conceived and executed! Shakespeare may sometimes be gross, but I boldly say that he is always moral and modest. Alas! in this our day, decency of manners is preserved at the expense of morality of heart, and delicacies for vice are allowed, whilst grossness against it is hypocritically, or at least morbidly, condemned.”

\(^10\) Prospero may well be surprised at what has shot up between his daughter and the Prince; for, though the result is just what he has planned and hoped for, it has come on far better than he has dared to expect. See Critical Notes.
Scene II. — Another part of the Island.

Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, with a bottle.

Steph. Tell not me: when the butt is out, we will drink water; not a drop before: therefore bear up, and board 'em. — Servant-monster, drink to me.

Trin. Servant-monster! the folly of this is! They say there's but five upon this isle: we are three of them; if th' other two be brain'd like us, the State totters.

Steph. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee: thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

[Caliban drinks.

Trin. Where should they be set else? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tail.

Steph. My man-monster hath drown'd his tongue in sack: for my part, the sea cannot drown me; I swam, ere I could recover the shore, five-and-thirty leagues, off and on, by this light. — Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.

Trin. Your lieutenant, if you list; he's no standard.

Steph. We'll not run, Monsieur Monster.

Trin. Nor go neither: but you'll lie like dogs, and yet say nothing neither.

Steph. Moon-calf, speak once in thy life, if thou be'st a good moon-calf.

1 "To bear up, put the helm up, and keep a vessel off her course." So says Admiral Smith.

2 Set here means, I suppose, fixed in a vacant stare. So in Twelfth Night, v. 1: "He's drunk, Sir Toby, an hour agone; his eyes were set at eight i' the morning."

3 Standard, like ensign, is put for the bearer of the standard.

4 Trinculo is punning upon standard, and probably means that Caliban is too drunk to stand.
Cal. How does thy Honour? Let me lick thy shoe. I'll not serve him, he is not valiant.

Trin. Thou liest, most ignorant monster: I am in case to justle a constable. Why, thou debosh'd fish, thou, was there ever man a coward that hath drunk so much sack as I to-day? Wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being but half a fish and half a monster?

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me! wilt thou let him, my lord?

Trin. Lord, quoth he. That a monster should be such a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo, again! bite him to death, I pr'ythee.

Steph. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head: if you prove a mutineer,—the next tree. The poor monster's my subject, and he shall not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleased To hearken once again the suit I made thee?

Steph. Marry, will I: kneel, and repeat it; I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter Ariel, invisible.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am subject to a tyrant; a sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated me of the island.

Ari. Thou liest.

Cal. Thou liest, thou jesting monkey, thou: I would my valiant master would destroy thee!

I do not lie.

5 The jester is breaking jests upon himself; his meaning being, "One so deep in drink as I am is valiant enough to quarrel with an officer of the law."

6 Debosh'd is an old form of debauched. Cotgrave explains, "Deboshed, lewd, incontinent, ungracious, dissolute, naught."

7 Natural was used for simpleton or fool. There is also a quibble intended between monster and natural, a monster being unnatural.
Steph. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in's tale, by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Trin. Why, I said nothing.

Steph. Mum, then, and no more. — [To Cal.] Proceed.

Cal. I say, by sorcery he got this isle; From me he got it. If thy Greatness will Revenge it on him, — for, I know, thou darest, But this thing dare not, —

Steph. That's most certain.

Cal. — Thou shalt be lord of it, and I will serve thee.

Steph. How now shall this be compass'd? Canst thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Yea, yea, my lord; I'll yield him thee asleep, Where thou mayst knock a nail into his head.

Ari. Thou liest; thou canst not.

Cal. What a pied ninny's this! Thou scurvy patch! — I do beseech thy Greatness, give him blows, And take his bottle from him: when that's gone, He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not show him Where the quick freshes are.

Steph. Trinculo, run into no further danger: interrupt the monster one word further, and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out of doors, and make a stock-fish of thee.

Steph. Didst thou not say he lied?

Ari. Thou liest.

8 Pied is dappled or diversely-coloured. Trinculo is "an allowed Fool" or jester, and wears a motley dress. Patch refers to the same circumstance.

9 Quick freshes are living springs of fresh water.

10 A stock-fish appears to have been a thing for practising upon with the fist, or with a cudgel. Ben Jonson has it in Every Man in his Humour, iii. 2: "'Slight, peace! thou wilt be beaten like a stock-fish."
Scene II. THE TEMPEST.

Steph. Do I so? take thou that. [Strikes him.] As you like this, give me the lie another time.

Trin. I did not give thee the lie. Out o' your wits and hearing too? A pox o' your bottle! this can sack and drinking do. A murrain on your monster, and the Devil take your fingers!

Cal. Ha, ha, ha!

Steph. Now, forward with your tale. — Pry'thee stand further off.

Cal. Beat him enough: after a little time, I'll beat him too.

Steph. Stand further. — Come, proceed.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him I' the afternoon to sleep: then thou mayst brain him,\(^11\)

Having first seized his books; or with a log Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake,

Or cut his weazand\(^12\) with thy knife. Remember, First to possess his books; for without them He's but a sot,\(^13\) as I am, nor hath not One spirit to command: they all do hate him As rootedly as I. Burn but his books.

He has brave utensils,\(^14\) — for so he calls them, —

Which, when he has a house, he'll deck't withal:

\(^11\) That is, knock out his brains. So, in Henry the Fourth, ii. 3, Hotspur says, "Zwounds! an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan."

\(^12\) Weazand is windpipe or throat. So Spenser has weazand-pipe.

\(^13\) Sot, from the French, was frequently used for fool; as our word besotted sometimes is. The Poet has it repeatedly so.

\(^14\) Here utensils has the accent on the first and third syllables. Such, it seems, is the English pronunciation of the word. So Wordsworth has it; and so Milton, in Paradise Regained, iii. 336:

> Mules after these, camels, and dromedaries,
> And wagons, fraught with utensils of war.
And that most deeply to consider is
The beauty of his daughter; he himself
Calls her a nonpareil: I ne’er saw woman,
But only Sycorax my dam and she;
But she as far surpasseth Sycorax
As great’st does least.

Steph. Is it so brave a lass?

Cald.? Ay, lord.

Steph. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter and I will be king and queen, — save our Graces! — and Trinculo and thyself shall be viceroyys. — Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Steph. Give me thy hand: I am sorry I beat thee; but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cald.? Within this half-hour will he be asleep:
Wilt thou destroy him then?

Steph. Ay, on mine honour.

Art.? This will I tell my master.

Cald.? Thou makest me merry; I am full of pleasure:
Let us be jocund: will you troll the catch
You taught me but while-ere? ¹⁵

Steph. At thy request, monster, I will do reason,¹⁶ any reason. — Come on, Trunculo, let us sing. ¹⁶

[Sings.]

Flout’em and scout’em, and scout’em and flout’em;

Thought is free.

¹⁵ While-ere is awhile since. Milton has another form of it in the opening of Paradise Regained: “I who erewhile the happy garden sung,” &c. — A catch is a song in parts, where all the singers sing the same notes, but in such order as to make harmony, and where each in turn catches the others; sometimes called a round. — To troll is to roll or round out glibly or volubly.

¹⁶ That is, will do what is reasonable. See Hamlet, page 58, note 13.
Cal. That's not the tune.

[Ariel plays the tune on a tabor and pipe.]

Steph. What is this same?

Trin. This is the tune of our catch, play'd by the picture of Nobody.\(^17\)

Steph. If thou be'st a man, show thyself in thy likeness: if thou be'st a devil, — take't as thou list.\(^18\)

Trin. O, forgive me my sins!

Steph. He that dies pays all debts: I defy thee. — Mercy upon us!

Cal. Art thou afeard?

Steph. No, monster, not I.

Cal. Be not afeard; the isle is full of noises, Sounds and sweet airs that give delight and hurt not. Sometime\(^19\) a thousand twangling instruments Will hum about mine ears; and sometime voices, That, if I then had waked after long sleep, Will make me sleep again: and then, in dreaming, The clouds methought would open, and show riches Ready to drop upon me; that, when I waked, I cried to dream again.

Steph. This will prove a brave kingdom to me, where I shall have my music for nothing.

Cal. When Prospero is destroy'd.

Steph. That shall be by-and-by: I remember the story.

Cal. The sound is going away; let's follow it, And after do our work.

\(^{17}\) The picture of Nobody was a common sign, and consisted of a head upon two legs, with arms. There was also a wood-cut prefixed to an old play of Nobody and Somebody, which represented this personage.

\(^{18}\) Here Stephano probably shakes his fist at the invisible musician, or the supposed devil, by way of defiance or bravado.

\(^{19}\) Sometime, again, for sometimes. See page 92, note 4.
Steph. Lead, monster; we'll follow.—I would I could see this taborer!²⁰ he lays it on.—Wilt come?
Trin. I'll follow, Stephano. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and Others.

Gonza. By'r lakin,¹ I can go no further, sir; My old bones ache: here's a maze trod, indeed, Through forth-rights and meanders!² by your patience, I needs must rest me.

Alon. Old lord, I cannot blame thee, Who am myself attach'd with weariness, To th' dulling of my spirits: sit down, and rest. Even here I will put off my hope, and keep it No longer for my flatterer: he is drown'd Whom thus we stray to find; and the sea mocks Our frustrate³ search on land. Well, let him go.

²⁰ "You shall heare in the ayre the sound of tabers and other instruments, to put the travellers in feare, by evill spirites that makes these soundes, and also do call diverse of the travellers by their names." Travels of Marcus Paulus, 1579. To some of these circumstances Milton also alludes in Comus:—

Of calling shapes, and beckoning shadows dire;
And aery tongues that syllable men's names
On sands, and shores, and desert wildernesses.

² Forth-rights are straight lines; meanders, crooked ones.

³ Frustrate for frustrated, meaning baffled; in accordance with the usage remarked in note 43, page 56. Shakespeare has many preterite forms made in the same way, such as confiscate, consecrate, articulate, and suffocate. The usage still holds in a few words, as in situate.
Anto. [Aside to Sebas.] I am right glad that he's so out of hope.
Do not, for one repulse, forgo the purpose
That you resolved t' effect.
Sebas. [Aside to Anto.] The next advantage
Will we take thoroughly.
Anto. [Aside to Sebas.] Let it be to-night.
For, now they are oppress'd with travel, they
Will not, nor cannot, use such vigilance
As when they're fresh.
Sebas. [Aside to Anto.] I say, to-night: no more.
[Solemn and strange music.
Alon. What harmony is this? My good friends, hark!
Gonza. Marvellous sweet music!

Enter Prospero above, invisible. Enter, below, several strange Shapes, bringing in a Banquet: they dance about it with gentle actions of salutation; and, inviting the King, &c., to eat, they depart.
Alon. Give us kind keepers, Heavens!—What were these?
Sebas. A living drollery. Now I will believe
That there are unicorns; that in Arabia
There is one tree, the phœnix' throne; one phœnix
At this hour reigning there.

4 Through and thorough, thoroughly and thoroughly, are but different forms of the same word, as to be thorough in a thing is to go through it. The old writers use the two forms indifferently. So in St. Matthew, iii. 12: “He will throughly purge his floor.”

5 Shows, called Drolleries, were in Shakespeare's time performed by puppets only. “A living drollery” is therefore a drollery performed not by puppets but by living personages; a live puppet-show.

6 This imaginary bird is often referred to by the old poets; by Shakespeare repeatedly. The ancient belief is expressed by Lyly in his Euphues, I’ll believe both;
And what does else want credit, come to me,
And I’ll be sworn ’tis true: travellers ne’er did lie,
Though fools at home condemn ’em.

If in Naples
I should report this now, would they believe me?
If I should say I saw such islanders,—
For, certes,7 these are people of the island,—
Who, though they are of monstrous shape, yet, note,
Their manners are more gentle-kind than of
Our human generation you shall find Many, nay, almost any.

Honest lord,
Thou hast said well; for some of you there present
Are worse than devils.

I cannot too much muse8
Such shapes, such gesture, and such sound, expressing—
Although they want the use of tongue—a kind
Of excellent dumb discourse.

Praise in departing.9
They vanish’d strangely.
No matter, since
They’ve left their viands behind; for we have stomachs. —
Will’t please you taste of what is here?

thus: “For as there is but one Phœnix in the world, so there is but one tree in Arabia, wherein she buildeth.” Also in Holland’s Pliny: “I myself have heard strange things of this kind of tree; namely, in regard of the bird Phœnix; for it was assured unto me, that the said bird died with that tree, and revived of itself as the tree sprung again.”

7 Certes for certainly; used several times by Shakespeare.
8 To muse is to wonder; to wonder at, in this instance.
9 “Praise in departing” is said to have been a proverbial phrase meaning, praise not your entertainment too soon; wait till the end.
Alon. Not I.

Gonza. Faith, sir, you need not fear. When we were boys,
Who would believe that there were mountaineers
Dew-lapp’d like bulls, whose throats had hanging at ’em
Wallets of flesh? or that there were such men
Whose heads stood in their breasts? which now we find,
Each putter-out of one for five will bring us
Good warrant of.

Alon. I will stand to, and feed,
Although my last: no matter, since I feel
The best is past. — Brother, my lord the Duke,
Stand to, and do as we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariel, like a harpy; claps his wings upon the table; and, by a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.

Ari. You are three men of sin, whom Destiny —
That hath to instrument this lower world

10 In the Alpine and other mountainous regions are many well-known cases of goitre that answer to this description. Probably, in the Poet’s time, some such had been seen by travellers, but not understood.

11 These were probably the same that Othello speaks of: “The Anthropophagi, and men whose heads do grow beneath their shoulders.” Also in Holland’s Pliny: “The Blemmyi, by report, have no heads, but mouth and eyes both in their breast.”

12 A sort of inverted life-insurance was practised by travellers in Shakespeare’s time. Before going abroad they put out a sum of money, for which they were to receive two, three, four, or even five times the amount upon their return; the rate being according to the supposed danger of the expedition. Of course the sum put out fell to the depositary, in case the putter-out did not return. So in Ben Jonson’s Every Man out of his Humour, ii. 1:
“I am determined to put forth some five thousand pound, to be paid me five for one, upon the return of myself and wife, and my dog, from the Turk’s Court in Constantinople.”

13 To, again, with the force of for or as. See page 78, note 9.
And what is in't — the never-surfeited sea
Hath caused to belch up; yea, and on this island
Where man doth not inhabit; you 'mongst men
Being most unfit to live. I've made you mad;
And even with such like valour men hang and drown
Their proper selves.

[Seeing Alon., Sebas., &c., draw their swords.
You fools! I and my fellows
Are ministers of Fate: the elements,
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud winds, or with bemock'd-at stabs
Kill the still-closing waters,\(^\text{14}\) as diminish
One dowle\(^\text{15}\) that's in my plume: my fellow-ministers
Are like invulnerable. If you could hurt,
Your swords are now too massy for your strengths,
And will not be uplifted. But remember,—
For that's my business to you,—that you three
From Milan did supplant good Prospero;
Exposed unto the sea, which hath requit\(^\text{16}\) it,
Him and his innocent child: for which foul deed
The powers, delaying, not forgetting, have Incensed the seas and shores, yea, all the creatures,
Against your peace. Thee of thy son, Alonso,
They have bereft; and do pronounce, by me,
Lingering perdition — worse than any death
Can be at once — shall step by step attend
You and your ways; whose wraths to guard you from,—
Which here, in this most desolate isle, else falls

\(^{14}\) Waters that continually close over cuts made in them, and leave no trace thereof. See page 61, note 62.

\(^{15}\) Dowle and down are said to have been equivalent. Here dowle seems rather to mean a single particle or thread of downe.

\(^{16}\) Requit for requited, like others noted before. See page 56, note 43.
Upon your heads, — is nothing, but heart-sorrow
And a clear life ensuing.

He vanishes in thunder; then, to soft music, enter the Shapes again, and dance with mocks and mowes, and carry out the table.

Pros. [Aside.] Bravely the figure of this harpy hast thou Perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, devouring:
Of my instruction hast thou nothing 'bated
In what thou hadst to say: so, with good life,
And observation strange, my meager ministers
Their several kinds have done. My high charms work,
And these mine enemies are all knit up
In their distractions: they now are in my power;
And in these fits I leave them, while I visit
Young Ferdinand, — who they suppose is drown'd, —
And his and my loved darling. [Exit from above.

Gonza. I' the name of something holy, sir, why stand you
In this strange stare?

Alon. O, it is monstrous, monstrous!
Methought the billows spoke, and told me of it;
The winds did sing it to me; and the thunder,
That deep and dreadful organ pipe, pronounced
The name of Prosper: it did bass my trespass.
Therefore my son i' the ooze is bedded; and

17 "From whose wrath nothing can shield or deliver you but heart-felt repentance and an amended life, or doing works meet for repentance." Whose refers to powers, in the sixth line before.

18 The sense appears to be, "with all the truth of life itself, and with rare observance of the proprieties of action."

19 To do one's kind is to act out one's nature, or act according to one's nature; though in this case the nature is an assumed one, that is, a part. So, in Antony and Cleopatra, the rustic, speaking of the asp, says, "the worm will do his kind." Also in the phrase, "The cat will after kind."
I'll seek him deeper than e'er plummet sounded,
And with him there lie muddled. [Exit.

Sebas. But one fiend at a time,
I'll fight their legions o'er.

Anto. I'll be thy second. [Exeunt Sebastian and Antonio.

Gonza. All three of them are desperate: their great guilt,
Like poison given to work a long time after;
Now 'gins to bite the spirits. — I do beseech you,
That are of suppler joints, follow them swiftly,
And hinder them from what this ecstasy
May now provoke them to.

Adri. Follow, I pray you. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — Before Prospero’s Cell.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pros. If I have too austerely punish’d you,
Your compensation makes amends; for I
Have given you here a thread of mine own life;
Or that for which I live; who once again
I tender to thy hand: all thy vexations

20 The natives of Africa have been supposed to possess the secret how to temper poisons with such art as not to operate till several years after they were administered.

21 Shakespeare uses ecstasy for any alienation of mind, a fit, or madness.

1 Your compensation is the compensation you receive. Shakespeare has many instances of like construction.

2 “Thread of mine own life” probably means about the same as “my very heart-strings”; strings the breaking of which spills the life.
Were but my trials of thy love, and thou
Hast strangely stood the test: here, afore Heaven,
I ratify this my rich gift. O Ferdinand,
Do not smile at me that I boast her off,
For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise,
And make it halt behind her.

Ferd. I do believe it
Against an oracle.

Pros. Then, as my gift, and thine own acquisition Worthily purchased, take my daughter: but,
If thou dost break her virgin-knot before
All sanctimonious ceremonies may
With full and holy rite be minister'd,
No sweet aspersion shall the Heavens let fall
To make this contract grow; but barren hate,
Sour-eyed disdain, and discord, shall bestrew
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it both: therefore take heed,
As Hymen's lamps shall light you.

Ferd. As I hope
For quiet days, fair issue, and long life,
With such love as 'tis now, the murkiest even,
The most opportune place, the strong'st suggestion
Our worser genius can, shall never melt

3 Alluding, no doubt, to the zone or sacred girdle which the old Romans used as the symbol and safeguard of maiden honour.
4 Sanctimonious, here, is sacred or religious. The marriage ritual was supposed to have something of consecrating virtue in it.
5 Aspersion in its primitive sense of sprinkling, as with genial rain or dew.—Here, again, as also just after, shall for will.
6 Not with wholesome flowers, such as the bridal bed was wont to be decked with, but with loathsome weeds.
7 Suggestion, again, for temptation. See page 89, note 53.
8 Genius, spirit, and angel were used indifferently for what we should Mine honour into lust; to take away
The edge of that day's celebration,
When I shall think, or Phœbus' steeds are founder'd,
Or Night kept chain'd below.

_Pros._

Fairly spoke.

Sit, then, and talk with her; she is thine own.—
What, Ariel! my industrious servant, Ariel!

_Enter Ariel._

_Ari._ What would my potent master? here I am.

_Pros._ Thou and thy meaner fellows your last service
Did worthily perform; and I must use you
In such another trick. Go bring the rabble,
O'er whom I give thee power, here, to this place:
Incite them to quick motion; for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
Some vanity of mine art: it is my promise,
And they expect it from me.

_Ari._ Presently?

_Pros._ Ay, with a twink.

_Ari._ Before you can say _Come_ and _Go_,
And breathe twice, and cry _So, so_,
Each one, tripping on his toe,
Will be here with mop and mow.10
Do you love me, master?—no?

call a man's worser or better _self_. _The Edinburgh Review_, July, 1869, has the following: "In mediæval theology, the rational soul is an angel, the lowest in the hierarchy for being clothed for a time in the perishing vesture of the body. But it is not necessarily an angel of light. It may be a good or evil genius, a guardian angel or a fallen spirit, a demon of light or darkness." See, also, _Julius Caesar_, page 76, note 16.

9 Perhaps meaning some magical show or illusion. _Display?_

10 Mop and mow were very often used thus together. _To mow_ is to _make mouths, to grimace_. Wedgwood, in his _English Etymology_, says that mop
SCENE I.  THE TEMPEST.  119

Pros.  Dearly, my delicate Ariel.  Do not approach
Till thou dost hear me call.

Ari.  Well, I conceive.  [Exit.

Pros.  Look thou be true; do not give dalliance
Too much the rein: the strongest oaths are straw
To th' fire i' the blood.

Ferd.  I warrant you, sir:
The white-cold virgin snow upon my heart
Abates the ardour of my liver.\textsuperscript{11}

Pros.  Well.—
Now come, my Ariel! bring a corollary,\textsuperscript{12}
Rather than want a spirit: appear, and pertly!
No tongue; all eyes; be silent.  [Soft music.

Enter Iris.

Iris.  Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas
Of wheat, rye, barley, vetches, oats, and peas;
Thy turfy mountains, where live nibbling sheep,
And flat meads thatch'd with\textsuperscript{13} them to keep;
Thy banks with peonéd and twilléd brims,\textsuperscript{14} has exactly the same derivation as mock, and means to gibber. Thus the ape both mops and mows; that is, he gibbers or chatters, and makes faces.

\textsuperscript{11} The liver was supposed to be the special seat of certain passions, and so was often put for the passions themselves.

\textsuperscript{12} Corollary here means a surplus number; more than enough.—Pertly, in the next line, is nimbly, alertly.

\textsuperscript{13} Stover is fodder and provision of all sorts for cattle. Steevens says that in some counties it “signifies hay made of coarse rank grass, such as even cows will not eat while it is green.”

\textsuperscript{14} A writer in The Edinburgh Review for October, 1872, argues, and, I think, proves, that peonéd here refers to the marsh-margold, which grew abundantly on the flat marshy banks of such still-running streams as the Warwickshire Avon, and which was provincially called peony or piony. He thus compares it with the garden peony: “The flowers, though differing in colour, have a remarkable similarity in general growth and shape, especially Which spongy April at thy hest betrims,
To make cold nymphs chaste crowns; and thy brown groves,
Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves,
Being lass-lorn; thy pole-clipt vineyard;\(^{15}\)
And thy sea-marge, steril, and rocky-hard,
Where thou thyself dost air; — the Queen o' the Sky,
Whose watery arch and messenger am I,
Bids thee leave these, and with her sovereign Grace,
Here on this grass-plot, in this very place,
To come and sport. Her peacocks fly amain:
Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

\(\text{Enter Ceres.}\)

\(\text{Cer.}\) Hail, many-colour'd messenger, that ne'er
Dost disobey the wife of Jupiter;
Who, with thy saffron wings, upon my flowers
Diffusest honey-drops, refreshing showers;
And with each end of thy blue bow dost crown
My bosky acres\(^{16}\) and my unshrubb'd down, in the early stage, when the fully-formed bud is ripe for blowing.” — In explanation of twilled the same writer has the following: “Twills is given by Halliwell as an older provincial word for reeds; and it was applied, like quills, to the serried rustling sedges of river reaches and marshy levels. It was indeed while watching the masses of waving sedge cutting the water-line of the Avon, not far from Stratford church, that we first felt the peculiar force and significance of the epithet.” — In the next line, April has the epithet spongy, probably because at that season the earth or the air sponges up so much water. So, in Cymbeline, iv. 2, we have “the spongy south,” referring to the south or south-west wind, which, in England, is apt to be densely charged with moisture; that is, foggy; elsewhere called “the foggy south.”

\(^{15}\) Lass-lorn is forsaken by his lass, the sweet-heart that has dismissed him. — Pole-clipt probably means poles embraced or clasped by the vines. Clip was often used for embrace. So in Coriolanus, i. 6: “Let me clip ye in arms as sound as when I woo'd.” — Vineyard is here a trisyllable.

\(^{16}\) “Bosky acres” are woody acres, fields intersected by luxuriant hedge-rows and copses. So in Milton’s Comus: —
Rich scarf to my proud Earth;—why hath thy Queen
Summon'd me hither, to this short-grass'd green?

Iris. A contract of true love to celebrate;
And some donation freely to estate
On the bless'd lovers.

Cer. Tell me, heavenly Bow,
If Venus or her son, as thou dost know,
Do now attend the Queen? Since they did plot
The means that dusky Dis my daughter got,¹⁷
Her and her blind boy's scandal'd company
I have forsworn.

Iris. Of her society
Be not afraid: I met her deity
Cutting the clouds towards Paphos,¹⁸ and her son
Dove-drawn with her. Here thought they to have done
Some wanton charm upon this man and maid,
Whose vows are, that no bed-right shall be paid
Till Hymen's torch be lighted: but in vain;
Mars's hot minion is return'd again;¹⁹
Her waspish-headed son has broke his arrows,
Swears he will shoot no more, but play with sparrows,
And be a boy right out.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle, or bushy dell of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourn from side to side.

¹⁷ The means whereby Pluto caught and carried off Proserpina. Proserpina was the daughter of Jupiter and Ceres: Dis, King of dusky Hades, fell so deep in love with her, that he must needs seize her, vi et armis, and spirit her away to Hades, to be his Queen.

¹⁸ A city in Cyprus, where Venus had a favourite country-seat.

¹⁹ Has gone back to Paphos. Minion is darling or favourite, and refers to Venus.—In what follows the meaning is, that Cupid is so chagrined and mortified at being thus baffled, that he is determined to give up his business, and act the love-god no more, but be a mere boy, or a boy outright.
Cer. High'st Queen of state, Great Juno comes; I know her by her gait.

Enter Juno.

Juno. How does my bounteous sister? Go with me To bless this twain, that they may prosperous be, And honour'd in their issue.

Song.

Juno. Honour, riches, marriage-blessing, Long continuance, and increasing, Hourly joys be still upon you! Juno sings her blessings on you.

Cer. Earth's increase, and foison plenty, Barns and garners never empty; Vines with clustering bunches growing; Plants with goodly burden bowing; Spring come to you at the farthest In the very end of harvest!

Scarcity and want shall shun you; Ceres' blessing so is on you.

20 "High'st Queen of state" is the same as Queen of highest state, or Queen above all other queens. State for throne, or chair of state. So the word was often used. — The Poet has many similar inversions.

21 Juno was distinguished by her walk, as the gods and goddesses generally were. So in Pericles, v. 1: "In pace another Juno."

22 "Foison plenty" is, strictly speaking, redundant or tautological, as both words mean the same. But plenty is used as an adjective,—plentiful or overflowing. See page 82, note 24.

23 "May your new Spring come, at the latest, as soon as the harvest of the old one is over!" This explanation is sustained, as Staunton points out, by Amos, ix. 13: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the ploughman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth the seed." Also, in The Faerie Queen, iii. 6, 42:—

There is continuall Spring, and harvest there
Continuall, both meeting in one time.
Scene I.

The Tempest.

Ferd. This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly. May I be bold To think these spirits?

Pros. Spirits, which by mine art I have from their confines call'd to enact My present fancies.

Ferd. Let me live here ever; So rare a wonder'd father and a wife Make this place Paradise.

Pros. Sweet, now, silence! Juno and Ceres whisper seriously; There's something else to do: hush, and be mute, Or else our spell is marr'd.

Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the winding brooks, With your sedge crowns and ever-harmless looks, Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land

24 That is, charmingly harmonious. See note 20, above.—"So bold as to think." See page 54, note 28.

25 "So rare-wonder'd a father" is the prose order of the words. The Poet has several such inversions for metre's sake. So in King John, iv. 1: "For putting on so new a fashion'd robe." So new-fashion'd a robe. The meaning in the text is, so rarely-wonderful a father; and the force of "so rare a wonder'd" extends over wife. Shakespeare has many instances of the ending -ed used in the same way; as in Macbeth, iii. 4: "You have broke the good meeting with most admired disorder." Admired for admirable, and in the sense of wonderful.

26 It was supposed that any noise or disturbance would upset or disconcert "the might of magic spells."

27 Crisp is curled, from the curl made by a breeze on the surface of the water. The transference of an epithet to an associated object, as of crisp from the water to the channel in this instance, is one of Shakespeare's favourite traits of style. So in Romeo and Juliet, iii. 5, when the lovers see tokens of the dawn that is to sever them, Romeo says, "what envious streaks do lace the severing clouds in yonder east."
Answer our summons; Juno does command:
Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate
A contract of true love; be not too late.—

Enter certain Nymphs.

You sun-burn'd sicklemen, of August weary,
Come hither from the furrow, and be merry:
Make holiday; your rye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing.

Enter certain Reapers, properly habited: they join with the Nymphs in a graceful dance; towards the end whereof Prospero starts suddenly, and speaks; after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they heavily vanish.

Pros. [Aside.] I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban and his confederates
Against my life: the minute of their plot
Is almost come.— [To the Spirits.] Well done; avoid;
no more!

Ferd. This is most strange: your father's in some passion
That works him strongly.

Mira. Never till this day
Saw I him touch'd with anger so distemper'd.

Pros. You do, my son, look in a moved sort.29
As if you were dismay'd: be cheerful, sir.
Our revels now are ended. These our actors,
As I foretold you, were all spirits, and
Are melted into air, into thin air:
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,

28 Vacate or make void the place; that is to say, be gone.
29 Here, as often, sort is manner or way.] So in Coriolanus, i. 3: “I pray you, daughter, express yourself in a more comfortable sort.”
The cloud-capp’d towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit,\(^{30}\) shall dissolve,
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,\(^{31}\)
Leave not a rack\(^{32}\) behind. We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.\(^{33}\) Sir, I am vex’d;
Bear with my weakness; my old brain is troubled:
Be not disturb’d with my infirmity:
If you be pleased, retire into my cell,
And there repose: a turn or two I’ll walk,
To still my beating mind.

\underline{Ferd.} \quad \underline{Mira.}
We wish you peace.

\underline{Pros.} \quad \text{[To Ariel.] Come with a thought!— I thank ye.}^{34} \quad \text{[Exeunt Ferd. and Mira.]— Ariel, come!}

\text{Re-enter Ariel.}

\underline{Ari.} Thy thoughts I cleave to: what’s thy pleasure?
\underline{Pros.} Spirit,

We must prepare to meet with\(^{35}\) Caliban.

\(^{30}\) All who possess it. Such is often the meaning of inherit. So in the divine beatitude, “Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth.”

\(^{31}\) Faded, from the Latin vado, is the same as vanished.

\(^{32}\) Rack was used of the highest, and therefore lightest or thinnest clouds. So in Bacon’s Silva Silvarum: “The winds in the upper region (which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below) pass without noise.” See, also, Hamlet, page 118, note 77.— The word rack is from reek, that is, vapour or smoke. See Critical Notes.

\(^{33}\) On for of. Still used so, especially in colloquial speech.— Rounded is finished, rounded off. The sleep here meant is the sleep of death; as in Hamlet’s soliloquy: “To die, to sleep; no more.”

\(^{34}\) “I thank ye” is addressed to Ferdinand and Miranda, in return for their “We wish you peace.”

\(^{35}\) To meet with was anciently the same as to counteract or oppose. So in
Ari. Ay, my commander: when I presented Ceres, I thought t' have told thee of it; but I fear'd Lest I might anger thee.

Pros. Well, say again, where didst thou leave these varlets?

Ari. I told you, sir, they were red-hot with drinking; So full of valour, that they smote the air For breathing in their faces; beat the ground For kissing of their feet; yet always bending Towards their project. Then I beat my tabor; At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears, Advanced their eyelids, lifted up their noses As they smelt music: so I charm'd their ears, That, calf-like, they my lowing follow'd through Tooth'd briers, sharp furzes, pricking goss, and thorns, Which enter'd their frail shins: at last I left them I' the filthy-mantled pool beyond your cell, There dancing up to th' chins, that the foul lake O'ertunk their feet.

Pros. This was well done, my bird.

Thy shape invisible retain thou still:
The trumpery in my house, go bring it hither, For stale to catch these thieves.

Herbert's Country Parson: "He knows the temper and pulse of every one in his house, and accordingly either meets with their vices, or advanceth their virtues."

36 Advanced is raised, as already explained. See page 70, note 93. — In the next line, "As they smelt," as if they smelt.

37 The pool mantled with filth. Mantle for the scum that forms on the surface of stagnant water. So in The Merchant, i. 1: "There are a sort of men whose visages do cream and mantle like a standing pond."

38 That for so that or insomuch that. — The meaning of this unsavoury passage is, that "the foul lake" was so stirred up by their dancing as to give out a worse odour than the men's feet did before they got into it.

39 Stale, in the art of fowling, signified a bait or lure to decoy birds.
Ari. I go, I go. [Exit.

Pros. A devil, a born devil, on whose nature Nurture can never stick; on whom my pains, Humanely taken, all are lost, quite lost; And as with age his body uglier grows, So his mind cankers. I will plague them all, Even to roaring.—

Re-enter Ariel laden with glistening apparel, &c. Come, hang them on this line.

Prospero and Ariel remain, invisible. Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, all wet.

Cal. Pray you, tread softly, that the blind mole may not Hear a foot fall: we now are near his cell.

40 Nurture for education, training, or culture.

41 As before observed, page 71, note 96, canker was used of an eating, malignant sore, like cancer, which is but another form of the same word; and also of rust. I am not quite certain which of these senses it bears here; probably the first. Shakespeare has the word repeatedly in both senses; as in Romeo and Juliet, i. 1, where the first canker'd means rusted, while the second has the sense of cancer:—

To wield old partisans, in hands as old,
Canker'd with peace, to part your canker'd hate.

42 Some question has been made as to what line means here. The word is commonly taken as meaning a clothes-line; but I rather agree with the late Rev. Joseph Hunter, and with Mr. A. E. Brae, that it means a line-tree, which may well be supposed to be growing in the lawn before Prospero's cell,—the same that Stephano addresses a little after as "Mistress Line." For Prospero is still in the same place where he has just been making a display of his art; and I can hardly think he has a clothes-line stretched across it. It has indeed been objected that line, meaning the line-tree, would not be used thus, without the adjunct tree or grove; but Mr. Brae disposes of this objection fairly, by quoting the following from Holinshed: "We are not without the plane, the ugh, the sorfe, the chestnut, the line, the black cherrie, and such like."
Steph. Monster, your fairy, which you say is a harmless fairy, has done little better than play’d the Jack with us.

Trin. Monster, I do smell all horse-stale; at which my nose is in great indignation.

Steph. So is mine.—Do you hear, monster? If I should take a displeasure against you, look you,—

Trin. Thou wert but a lost monster.

Cal. Nay, good my lord, give me thy favour still.

Be patient, for the prize I’ll bring thee to Shall hoodwink this mischance: therefore speak softly;
All’s hush’d as midnight yet.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool,—

Steph. There is not only disgrace and dishonour in that, monster, but an infinite loss.

Trin. That’s more to me than my wetting: yet this is your harmless fairy, monster.

Steph. I will fetch off my bottle, though I be o’er ears for my labour.

Cal. Pr’ythee, my King, be quiet. See’st thou here?
This is the mouth o’ the cell: no noise, and enter.
Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own for ever, and I, thy Caliban,
For aye thy foot-licker.

Steph. Give me thy hand. I do begin to have bloody thoughts.

To play the Jack is to play the Knave; or it may be to play the Jack-o’-lantern, by leading them astray.

We should say “my good lord.” Similar inverted phrases occur continually in old plays; such as “dread my lord,” “gracious my lord,” “dear my mother,” “sweet my sister,” “gentle my brother,” &c.

To hoodwink a thing is, apparently, to make one overlook it or forget it, to blind him to it, or put it out of his sight. So hoodman-blind is an old term for what we call blind-man’s-buff.
Trin. O King Stephano! O peer!46 O worthy Stephano! look what a wardrobe here is for thee!
Cal. Let it alone, thou fool; it is but trash.
Trin. O, ho, monster! we know what belongs to a frippery.47 — O King Stephano!
Steph. Put off that gown, Trinculo; by this hand, I'll have that gown.
Trin. Thy Grace shall have it.
Cal. The dropsy drown this fool! — what do you mean, To dote thus on such luggage? Let's along, And do the murder first: if he awake, From toe to crown he'll fill our skins with pinches; Make us strange stuff.
Steph. Be you quiet, monster. — Mistress line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line: now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin.48
Trin. Do, do: we steal by line and level,49 an't like your Grace.

46 A humorous allusion to the old ballad entitled "Take thy old Cloak about thee," a part of which is sung by Iago in Othello, ii. 3. I add one stanza of it:—

King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown;
He held them sixpence all too dear,
Therefore he call'd the tailor lown.

47 Frippery was the name of a shop where old clothes were sold.

48 King Stephano puns rather swiftly here. The name of the tree, as explained in note 42, suggests to him the equinoctial line, under which certain regions were much noted for their aptness to generate diseases that commonly made the sufferers bald. Jerkin was the name of a man's upper garment. Mr. Brae thinks there may be another quibble intended between hair and air; as clothes are hung out to be aired, and the jerkin was likely to lose the benefit of such airing; but I should rather take hair as referring to the nap of the jerkin, which was likely to be worn off in Stephano's using; so as to make the jerkin a bald jerkin in the nearer sense of having lost its hair.

49 Do, do, is said, apparently, in commendation of Stephano's wit as dis-
Steph. I thank thee for that jest; here's a garment for't: wit shall not go unrewarded while I am king of this country. Steal by line and level is an excellent pass of pate; there's another garment for't.

Trin. Monster, come, put some lime upon your fingers, and away with the rest.

Cal. I will have none on't: we shall lose our time, And all be turn'd to barnacles, or to apes With foreheads villainous low.

Steph. Monster, lay-to your fingers: help to bear this away, played in his address to the jerkin. — “Steal by line and level” is a further punning on the same word; the plumb-line and the level being instruments used by architects and builders. So that to steal by line and level was to show wit in stealing, or to steal artistically.

50 Pass of pate is a spurt or sally of wit; pass being, in the language of fencing, a thrust.

51 Lime, or bird-lime, was a sticky substance used for catching birds. So in 2 Henry the Sixth, i. 3: “Myself have limed a bush for her, and placed a quire of such enticing birds, that she will light to listen to their lays.” See, also, Hamlet, page 154, note 8.

52 Caliban's barnacle is the clakis or tree-goose, as it was called, which was thought to be produced from the shell-fish, lepas antifera, also called barnacle. Gerard's Herbal has the following account of the matter: “There are in the north parts of Scotland certain trees whereon do grow shell-fishes, which, falling into the water, do become fowls, whom we call barnakles, in the north of England brant-geese, and in Lancashire tree-geese.” Perhaps the old notion of the barnacle-goose being produced by the barnacle-fish grew from the identity of name. As Caliban prides himself on his intellectuality, he naturally has a horror of being turned into any thing so stupid as a goose.

53 A low forehead was held a deformity. On the other hand, a forehead high and broad was deemed a handsome feature in man or woman. The Poet has several allusions to this old idea. So in The Two Gentlemen, iv. 4: “Ay, but her forehead's low, and mine's as high.” And in Spenser's description of Belphoebe, Faerie Queene, ii. 3, 24:

Her ivorie forehead, full of bountie brave,
Like a broad table did itselde dispred.
where my hogshead of wine is, or I'll turn you out of my kingdom: go to, carry this.

Trin. And this.

Steph. Ay, and this.

A noise of hunters heard. Enter divers Spirits in shape of hounds, and hunt them about; Prospero and Ariel setting them on.

Pros. Hey, Mountain, hey!

Ari. Silver! there it goes, Silver!

Pros. Fury, Fury! there, Tyrant, there! hark! hark!—

[Cal., Steph., and Trin. are driven out.]

Go charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps; and more pinch-spotted make them
Than pard or cat-o'-mountain.

Ari. Hark, they roar!

Pros. Let them be hunted soundly. At this hour
Lie at my mercy all mine enemies:
Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou
Shalt have the air at freedom: for a little Follow, and do me service.

[Exeunt.]

54 Go to is a phrase occurring very often, and of varying import, sometimes of impatience, sometimes of reproof, sometimes of encouragement. Hush up, come on, be off, are among its meanings.

55 In certain fevers, the mucilage sometimes gets dried out of the joints, especially the knee-joints, so as to cause a creaking or grating sound when the patient walks. Of course the effect is very painful.

56 Agèd seems to be used here with the sense of the intensive old, as before explained. See page 68, note 86.

57 Pard was in common use for leopard, as also for panther.—Cat-o'-mountain is probably the wild-cat. So in Minsheu's Spanish Dictionary: "Gato montes: A cat of mountaine, a wilde cat." This animal, however, can hardly be called spotted; it is rather striped. Perhaps the term was not confined to one species of animal.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero in his magic robes, and Ariel.

Pros. Now does my project gather to a head: My charms crack not; my spirits obey; and Time Goes upright with his carriage.¹ How's the day? Ari. On the sixth hour; at which time, my lord, You said our work should cease.

Pros. I did say so, When first I raised the tempest. Say, my spirit, How fares the King and's followers? Ari. Confined together In the same fashion as you gave in charge; Just as you left them; all are prisoners, sir, In the line-grove which weather-fends your cell;² They cannot budge till your release.³ The King, His brother, and yours, abide all three distracted; And the remainder mourning over them, Brimful of sorrow and dismay; but chiefly He that you term'd The good old lord, Gonzalo: His tears run down his beard, like winter-drops From eaves of reeds. Your charm so strongly works 'em,

¹ Time does not break down or bend under its load, or what it carries; that is, "we have time enough for what we have undertaken to do."
² "Which defends your cell against the weather, or the storm."
³ "Till you release them," of course. The objective genitive, as it is called, where present usage admits only of the subjective genitive. The Poet has many such constructions. See page 116, note 1.
That, if you now beheld them, your affections
Would become tender.

Pros. Dost thou think so, spirit?
Ari. Mine would, sir, were I human.

Pros. And mine shall.

Hast thou, which art but air, a touch, a feeling
Of their afflictions, and shall not myself,
One of their kind, that relish all as sharply
Passion as they, be kindlier moved than thou art?
Though with their high wrongs I am struck to th' quick,
Yet with my nobler reason 'gainst my fury
Do I take part: the rarer action is
In virtue than in vengeance: they being penitent,
The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a frown further. Go release them, Ariel:
My charms I'll break, their senses I'll restore,
And they shall be themselves.

Ari. I'll fetch them, sir. [Exit.

Pros. Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and groves;
And ye that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him
When he comes back; you demi-puppets that
By moonshine do the green-sour ringlets make,

All is here used adverbially, in the sense of quite; and passion is the object of relish, and has the sense of suffering. The sense of the passage is sometimes defeated by setting a comma after sharply.

This speech is in some measure borrowed from Medea's, in Ovid; the expressions are, many of them, in the old translation by Golding. But the exquisite fairy imagery is Shakespeare's own.

These ringlets were circles of bright-green grass, supposed to be produced by the footsteps of fairies dancing in a ring. The origin of them is still, I believe, a mystery. Alluded to in A Midsummer-Night's Dream, ii. r.
—Mushrooms were also thought to be the work of fairies; probably from their growing in rings, and springing up with such magical quickness.
Whereof the ewe not bites; and you whose pastime
Is to make midnight mushrooms; that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew;\(^7\) by whose aid —
Weak masters though ye be\(^8\) — I have be-dimm'd
The noon-tide Sun, call'd forth the mutinous winds,
And 'twixt the green sea and the azure vault
Set roaring war: to the dread-rattling thunder
Have I given fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak
With his own bolt: the strong-based promontory
Have I made shake, and by the spurs\(^9\) pluck'd up
The pine and cedar: graves at my command
Have waked their sleepers, oped, and let 'em forth
By my so potent art. But this rough magic
I here abjure; and, when I have required
Some heavenly music, — which even now I do, —
To work mine end upon their senses that
This airy charm is for, I'll break my staff,
Bury it certain fathoms in the earth,
And deeper than did ever plummet sound
I'll drown my book. \[Solemn music.\]

Re-enter Ariel: after him, Alonso, with a frantic gesture, attended by Gonzalo; Sebastian and Antonio in like manner, attended by Adrian and Francisco: they all enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charmed; which Prospero observing, speaks.

\(^7\) They rejoice, because “the curfew tolls the knell of parting day,” and so signals the time for the fairies to begin their nocturnal frolics.

\(^8\) Weak, if left to themselves, because they waste their force in sports and in frivolous or discordant aims; but powerful when guided by wisdom, and trained to worthy ends. This passage has often seemed to me a strange prognostic of what human intelligence has since done in taming and marshalling the great forces of Nature into the service of man.

\(^9\) The spurs are the largest and longest roots of trees.
A solemn air, as the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure the brains,
Now useless, boil'd within the skull! — There stand,
For you are spell-stopp'd. —
Holy Gonzalo, honourable man,
Mine eyes, even sociable to the show of thine,
Fall fellowly drops. — The charm dissolves apace;
And as the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness, so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle
Their clearer reason. — O thou good Gonzalo,
My true preserver, and a loyal sir
To him thou follow'st! I will pay thy graces
Home both in word and deed. — Most cruelly

10 Boil'd for boiling; the passive form with the neuter sense: for the verb to boil is used as active, passive, or neuter, indifferently. We have boil'd just so again in The Winter's Tale, iii. 3: “Would any but these boil'd brains of nineteen and two-and-twenty hunt this weather?” — Love, madness, and melancholy are imaged by Shakespeare under the figure of boiled brains, or boiling brains, or seething brains. So in A Midsummer-Night's Dream, v. 1: “Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,” &c. Also in Twelfth Night, ii. 5: “If I lose a scruple of this sport, let me be boiled to death with melancholy.” Probably the expression grew from the heat or fever that was understood or supposed to agitate the brain in such cases.

11 In Shakespeare's time, holy, besides the religious sense of godly or sanctified, was also used in the moral sense of righteous or just. And why not?

12 Sociable to is the same as sympathetic with. — Fall, in the next line, is evidently a transitive verb, equivalent to let fall. The usage was common. So in ii. 1, of this play: “To fall it on Gonzalo.”

13 Senses was very often used thus of the mental faculties; as we still say of one who does not see things as they are, that he is out of his senses. The meaning of the passage may be given something thus: “As morning dispels the darkness, so their returning reason begins to dispel the blinding mists or fumes that are gathered about it.”

14 Home was much used as a strong intensive; meaning thoroughly, or to the utmost. See Hamlet, page 152, note 2; and Macbeth, page 60, note 26.
Didst thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter:
Thy brother was a furtherer in the act; —
Thou’rt pinch’d for’t now, Sebastian. — Flesh and blood,
You, brother mine, that entertain’d ambition,
Expell’d remorse and nature;¹⁵ who, with Sebastian, —
Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong, —
Would here have kill’d your King; I do forgive thee,
Unnatural though thou art. — Their understanding
Begins to swell; and the approaching tide
Will shortly fill the reasonable shore,¹⁶
That now lies foul and muddy. Not one of them
That yet looks on me, or would know me. — Ariel,
Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell: — [Exit Ariel.
I will discase me,¹⁷ and myself present
As I was sometime Milan: — quickly, spirit;
Thou shalt ere long be free.

Ariel re-enters, singing, and helps to attire Prospero.

_Ari._ Where the bee sucks, there suck I:
   In a cowslip’s bell I lie, —
   There I couch: when owls do cry,
   On the bat’s back I do fly
   After Summer, merrily.¹⁸
Merrily, merrily shall I live now
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

¹⁵ Here, as commonly in Shakespeare, _remorse_ is _pity_ or _tenderness of heart_. _Nature_ is put for _natural affection_. Often so.

¹⁶ “The _reasonable shore_” is the shore _of reason_.

¹⁸ Ariel uses “the bat’s back” as his pleasant vehicle, to pursue Summer in its progress to other regions, and thus live merrily under continual blossoms. Such appears the most natural as well as most poetical meaning
Pros. Why, that's my dainty Ariel! I shall miss thee; But yet thou shalt have freedom: — so, so, so. To the King's ship, invisible as thou art: There shalt thou find the mariners asleep Under the hatches; the master and the boatswain Being awaked, enforce them to this place, And presently, I pr'ythee.

Ari. I drink the air before me, and return Or e'er your pulse twice beat. [Exit Ariel.

Gonza. All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement Inhabit here: some heavenly power guide us Out of this fearful country!

Pros. Behold, sir King, The wrongèd Duke of Milan, Prospero: For more assurance that a living prince Does now speak to thee, I embrace thy body; And to thee and thy company I bid A hearty welcome.

Alon. Whèr thou be'st he or no, Or some enchanted trifle to abuse me, As late I have been, I not know: thy pulse of this much disputed passage. As a matter of fact, however, bats do not migrate in quest of Summer, but become torpid in winter. Was the Poet ignorant of this, or did he disregard it, thinking that such beings as Ariel were not bound to observe the rules of natural history? See Critical Notes.

19 The Poet often so contracts whether. See Julius Caesar, page 43, note 19.

20 Enchanted trifle probably means bewitching phantom. Enchanted for enchanting, in accordance with the usage, before noted, of active and passive forms indiscriminately. See page 60, note 59. Walker, however, thinks the meaning to be "some trifle produced by enchantment to abuse me." — Abuse, both verb and substantive, was often used in the sense of deceive, delude, or cheat.
Beats, as of flesh and blood; and, since I saw thee,
Th' affliction of my mind amends, with which,
I fear, a madness held me: this must crave—
An if this be at all—a most strange story.
Thy dukedom I resign and do entreat
Thou pardon me my wrongs. But how should Prospero
Be living and be here?

Pros. First, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age, whose honour cannot
Be measured or confined.

Gonz. Whether this be
Or be not, I'll not swear.

Pros. You do yet taste
Some subtilties o' the isle, that will not let you Believe things certain.—Welcome, my friends all:—
[Aside to Sebas. and Anto.] But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
I here could pluck his Highness' frown upon you,
And justify you traitors: at this time
I'll tell no tales.

Sebas. [Aside to Anto.] The Devil speaks in him.

21 That is, if there be any reality in all this. An if, again, as before explained. See page 96, note 20.
22 The dukedom of Milan had been made tributary to Naples by Antonio, as the price of aid in his usurpation.
23 Still another instance of the construction mentioned in note 3 of this scene. “My wrongs” may mean either the wrongs I have done, or the wrongs I have suffered. Here it means the former.
24 Subtilties are quaint deceptive inventions; the word is common to ancient cookery, in which a disguised or ornamented dish is so termed. Fabyan’s Chronicle, 1542, describes one made of pastry, “called a pelican sitting on his nest with his birds, and an image of Saint Catharine holding a book, and disputing with the doctors.”
25 “Prove you traitors,” or, “justify myself for calling you such.”
Pros.
For you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive
Thy rankest fault; all of them; and require
My dukedom of thee, which perforce, I know,
Thou must restore.

Alon.
If thou be'st Prospero,
Give us particulars of thy preservation;
How thou hast met us here, who three hours since
Were wreck'd upon this shore; where I have lost—
How sharp the point of this remembrance is!—
My dear son Ferdinand.

Pros.
I'm woe for't, sir.

Alon. Irreparable is the loss; and patience
Says it is past her cure.

Pros.
I rather think
You have not sought her help; of whose soft grace,
For the like loss I have her sovereign aid,
And rest myself content.

Alon. You the like loss!

Pros. As great to me, as late; and, portable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you; for I
Have lost my daughter.

Alon. A daughter!
O Heavens, that they were living both in Naples,
The King and Queen there! that they were, I wish

26 Perforce is of force, that is, necessarily or of necessity.
27 Woe was often used thus with an adjective sense; sorry.
28 "As great to me, and as recent." Or the meaning may be, "As great to me as it is recent." Either explanation suits, but I prefer the first. — Portable is endurable. The Poet has it repeatedly.
Myself were muddied in that oozy bed
Where my son lies. When did you lose your daughter?

Pros. In this last tempest. I perceive, these lords
At this encounter do so much admire,\(^2^9\)
That they devour their reason, and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth, these words
Are natural breath:\(^3^0\) but, howsoe’er you have Been justled from your senses, know for certain
That I am Prospero, and that very Duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan; who most strangely
Upon this shore, where you were wreck’d, was landed,
To be the lord on’t. No more yet of this;\(^3^1\)
For ’tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast, nor Befitting this first meeting. Welcome, sir;
This cell’s my Court: here have I few attendants,
And subjects none abroad: pray you, look in.
My dukedom since you’ve given me again,
I will requite you with as good a thing;
At least bring forth a wonder to content ye
As much as me my dukedom.

The entrance of the Cell opens, and discovers Ferdinand and Miranda playing at chess.

Mira. Sweet lord, you play me false.
Ferd. No, my dear’st love,
I would not for the world.

\(^2^9\) Shakespeare commonly uses ‘admire’ and its derivatives in the Latin sense; that of wonder or amazement. The meaning here is, that their reason is swallowed up in wonder.

\(^3^0\) “That these words which I am speaking are the words of a real living man.”

\(^3^1\) No more of this now, or for the present. So yet was often used.
Mira. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wrangle,\(^{32}\) And I would call it fair play.

Alon. If this prove
A vision of the island, one dear son
Shall I twice lose.\(^{33}\)

Sebas. A most high miracle!
Ferd. Though the seas threaten, they are merciful!
I've cursed them without cause. [...Kneels to Alon.]

Alon. Now all the blessings
Of a glad father compass thee about!
Arise, and say how thou camest here.

Mira. O, wonder!
How many goodly creatures are there here!
How beauteous mankind is! O brave new world,
That has such people in't!

Pros. 'Tis new to thee.

Alon. What is this maid with whom thou wast at play?
Your eld' st acquaintance cannot be three hours:
Is she the goddess that hath sever'd us,
And brought us thus together?

\(^{32}\) The sense evidently wanted here is, "you might play me false"; but how to get this out of wrangle, is not very apparent. Was wrangle used as a technical term in chess and other games? In King Henry V., i. 2, we have this: "He hath made a match with such a wrangler, that all the Courts of France will be disturb'd with chases." This is said with reference to the game of tennis; and wrangler here seems to mean opponent or antagonist. Wrangle, however, is from the same original as wrong, and its radical sense is the same. Mr. Joseph Crosby thinks the word is used here in this its radical sense. He writes me as follows: "In the North of England, wrangdom is a common word for wrong, and wrangously for wrongfully. Wrangle in this sentence is an explanatory parallelism of Miranda's 'play me false,' and means wrong me,—cheat me in the game."

\(^{33}\) "Shall twice lose" appears to mean "shall lose a second time." He has in effect lost his son once in supposing him drowned; and will lose him again in the dispelling of the vision, if vision it should prove.
Ferd. Sir, she's mortal; But by immortal Providence she's mine: I chose her when I could not ask my father For his advice, nor thought I had one. She Is daughter to this famous Duke of Milan, Of whom so often I have heard renown, But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life; and second father This lady makes him to me.

Alon. I am hers:
But, O, how oddly will it sound that I Must ask my child forgiveness!

Pros. There, sir, stop:
Let us not burden our remembrance with A heaviness that's gone.

Gonza. I've inly wept, Or should have spoke ere this. — Look down, you gods, And on this couple drop a blessed crown! For it is you that have chalk'd forth the way Which brought us hither.

Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo!

Gonza. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue Should become Kings of Naples! O, rejoice Beyond a common joy! and set it down With gold on lasting pillars: In one voyage Did Claribel her husband find at Tunis; And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife Where he himself was lost; Prospero, his dukedom, In a poor isle; and all of us, ourselves, When no man was his own.34

34 When no man was in his senses, or had self-possession.
Alon. [To Ferd. and Mira.] Give me your hands:
Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart
That doth not wish you joy!

Gonza. Be't so! Amen! —

Re-enter Ariel, with the Master and Boatswain amazedly following.

O, look, sir, look, sir! here is more of us:
I prophesied, if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown. — Now, blasphemy,
That swear'st grace o'erboard, not an oath on shore?
Hast thou no mouth by land? What is the news?

Boats. The best news is, that we have safely found
Our King and company; the next, our ship —
Which, but three glasses since, we gave out split —
Is tight, and yare, and bravely rigg'd, as when
We first put out to sea.

Ari. [Aside to Pros.] Sir, all this service
Have I done since I went.

Pros. [Aside to Ariel.] My tricksy\textsuperscript{35} spirit!

Alon. These are not natural events; they strengthen
From strange to stranger. — Say, how came you hither?

Boats. If I did think, sir, I were well awake,
I'd strive to tell you. We were dead of sleep,
And — how we know not — all clapp'd under hatches;
Where, but even now, with strange and several noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
And more diversity of sounds, all horrible,
We were awaked; straightway, at liberty:
When we, in all her trim, freshly beheld

\textsuperscript{35} Ariel seems to be called tricksy, because his execution has the celerity of magic, or of a juggler's tricks: "clever, adroit, dexterous," says Dyce.
Our royal, good, and gallant ship; our master
Capering to eye her: on a trice, so please you,
Even in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither.

_Ari._ [Aside to Pros.] Was't well done?
_Pro. _ [Aside to Ari.] Bravely, my diligence. Thou shalt be free.

_Alon._ This is as strange a maze as e'er men trod;
And there is in this business more than Nature
Was ever conduct of: some oracle
Must rectify our knowledge.

_Pro._ Sir, my liege,
Do not infest your mind with beating on
The strangeness of this business; at pick'd leisure,
Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve you —
Which to you shall seem probable — of every
These happen'd accidents: till when, be cheerful,
And think of each thing well. — [Aside to Ariel.] Come hither, spirit:
Set Caliban and his companions free;
Untie the spell. [Exit Ari.] — How fares my gracious sir?
There are yet missing of your company
Some few odd lads that you remember not.

36 "Capering to eye her" is leaping or dancing with joy at seeing her.
Still another instance of the infinitive used gerundively.
37 To mope is to be dull or stupid; originally, dim-sighted.
38 Conduct for conductor; that is, guide or leader. Often so.
39 We have a like expression in use now,—"Still hammering at it."
40 In Shakespeare, to resolve often means to satisfy, or to explain satisfactorily. — Single appears to be used adverbially here, its force going with the predicate; and the last which refers to resolve: "I will explain to you —and the explanation shall seem to you natural and likely—all these incidents, severally, or in detail, as they have happened."
Re-enter Ariel, driving in Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, in their stolen apparel.

Steph. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself; for all is but fortune. — Coragio, bully-monster, coragio!

Trin. If these be true spies which I wear in my head, here's a goodly sight.

Cal. O Setebos, these be brave spirits indeed!

How fine my master is! I am afraid
He will chastise me.

Sebas. Ha, ha!

What things are these, my Lord Antonio?
Will money buy 'em?

Anto. Very like; one of them
Is a plain fish, and, no doubt, marketable.

Pros. Mark but the badges of these men, my lords,
Then say if they be true. This mis-shaped knave,—
His mother was a witch; and one so strong
That could control the Moon, make flows and ebbs,
And deal in her command without her power.

These three have robb'd me; and this demi-devil—
For he's a bastard one—had plotted with them
To take my life: two of these fellows you Must know and own; this thing of darkness I Acknowledge mine.

41 Stephano's tongue is rather tipsy still, and staggers into a misplacement of his words. He means "Let every man shift for himself."

42 Without has here the sense of beyond; a common usage in the Poet's time. So in A Midsummer-Night's Dream, iv. 1: "Where we might be without the peril of th' Athenian law." And in Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, i. 4: "O, now I apprehend you: your phrase was without me before." So that the meaning of the text is, "who could outdo the Moon in exercising the Moon's own command."
Cal. I shall be pinch’d to death.
Alon. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler?
Sebas. He is drunk now: where had he wine?
Alon. And Trinculo is reeling ripe: where should they Find this grand liquor that hath gilded 43 ’em?—
How camest thou in this pickle?
Trin. I have been in such a pickle since I saw you last, that, I fear me, will never out of my bones: I shall not fear fly-blowing. 44
Sebas. Why, how now, Stephano!
Steph. O, touch me not! I am not Stephano. but a cramp.
Pros. You’d be king o’ the isle, sirrah?
Steph. I should have been a sore 45 one, then.
Alon. [Pointing to Cal.] This is as strange a thing as e’er I look’d on.
Pros. He is as disproportion’d in his manners
As in his shape.—Go, sirrah, to my cell;

43 The phrase being gilded was a trite one for being drunk; perhaps from the effect of liquor in colouring the face, but more likely because drinking puts one into golden altitudes. It has been suggested, also, that there is an allusion to the grand elixir of the alchemists, which was an ideal medicine for gilding a base metal in the sense of transmuting it into gold; as also for repairing health and prolonging life in man. This, too, is probable enough; for the Poet is fond of clustering various ideas round a single image.

44 Trinculo is playing rather deeply upon pickle; and one of the senses here intended is that of being pickled in salt or brine so as not to become tainted. Fly-blows are the maggot-eggs deposited by flies; and to fly-blow is to taint with such eggs.

45 A pun upon the different senses of sore, one of which is harsh, severe, or oppressive. The same equivoque occurs in 2 Henry the Sixth, iv. 7, where Dick proposes that Cade’s mouth be the source of English law, and John remarks, aside,—“Mass, ’twill be a sore law, then; for he was thrust in the mouth with a spear, and ’tis not whole yet.”
Take with you your companions; as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.

Cal. Ay, that I will; and I'll be wise hereafter,
And seek for grace. What a thrice double ass
Was I, to take this drunkard for a god,
And worship this dull fool!

Pros. Go to; away!

Alon. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you found it.

Sebas. Or stole it, rather.

[Exeunt Cal., Steph., and Trin.

Pros. Sir, I invite your Highness and your train
To my poor cell, where you shall take your rest
For this one night; which, part of it, I'll waste
With such discourse as, I not doubt, shall make it
Go quick away,—the story of my life,
And the particular accidents gone by,
Since I came to this isle: and in the morn
I'll bring you to your ship, and so to Naples,
Where I have hope to see the nuptial
Of these our dear-belov'd solemnized;
And thence retire me to my Milan, where Every third thought shall be my grave.

Alon. I long
To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.

Pros. I'll deliver all;
And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales,
And sail so expeditious, that shall catch
Your royal fleet far off.—*[Aside to Ari.] My Ariel, chick,

46 That is, withdraw myself. The Poet has various instances of retire thus used as a transitive verb.
That is thy charge: then to the elements
Be free, and fare thou well! — Please you, draw near.

[Exeunt]

EPILOGUE.

SPOKEN BY PROSPERO.

Now my charms are all o’erthrown,
And what strength I have’s mine own,—
Which is most faint: now, ’tis true,
I must be here confined by you,
Or sent to Naples. Let me not,
Since I have my dukedom got,
And pardon’d the deceiver, dwell
In this bare island by your spell;
But release me from my bands,
With the help of your good hands.47

Gentle breath of yours my sails
Must fill, or else my project fails,
Which was to please: now I want
Spirits to enforce, art to enchant;
And my ending is despair,
Unless I be relieved by prayer;
Which pierces so, that it assaul tMercy itself, and frees all faults.
As you from crimes would pardon’d be,
Let your indulgence set me free.

47 The Epilogue is supposed to be addressed to the theatrical audience, and the speaker here solicits their applause by the clapping of their hands. Noise was a breaker of enchantments and spells; hence the applause would release him from his bonds.
CRITICAL NOTES.

ACT I., SCENE I.

Page 44. Blow, till thou burst thy wind, &c.—Steevens conjectured "Blow, till thou burst thee, wind." This accords with a similar passage in King Lear, iii. 2: "Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks!" See, however, foot-note 3.

P. 45. Bring her to try wi' th' main-course.—In the original, "bring her to Try with Maine-course"; which leaves us in doubt as to how the clause should be punctuated. Mr. Grant White, at the suggestion of Mr. W. W. Story, prints "Bring her to: try wi' th' main-course"; and quotes the following from Lord Mulgrave, a sailor critic: "The gale increasing, the topmast is struck, to take the weight from aloft, make the ship drive less to leeward, and bear the mainsail, under which the ship is brought to." The likelihoods seem about evenly balanced between the two ways of printing the passage. Of the more recent editors, Collier, Staunton, Singer, and Dyce punctuate as in the text. See foot-note 9.

P. 47. Ling, heath, broom, furze, any thing.—The original has "Long heath, Browne firrs." But it does not appear that there are or ever were any plants known as long heath and brown furze. The reading in the text is Hanmer's, and has the unqualified approval of Walker; who observes, "The balance requires it. Besides, what are long heath and brown furze?" See foot-note 17.
THE TEMPEST.

ACT I., SCENE I.

P. 48. A brave vessel,
Who had no doubt some noble creatures in her.—So Theobald and Collier's second folio: the original has creature instead of creatures.

P. 50. I have with such prevision in mine art.—The old text has provision. The change is from Collier's second folio, and accords with what Ariel says in ii. 1: "My master through his art foresees the danger that you, his friend, are in."

P. 51. And thy father
Was Duke of Milan; thou his only heir,
A princess,—no worse issued.—The old text reads "and his onely heire"; the and being evidently repeated by mistake from the preceding line. Steevens made the correction. The original also has "And Princesse; no worse Issued." Corrected by Pope. The old copies have various instances of and thus misprinted for a. So in King Henry VIII., ii. 4: "On the debating And Marriage 'twixt the Duke of Orleance and Our daughter Mary."

P. 53. The ivy which had hid my princely trunk,
And suck'd the verdure out on't.—The original reads "Suck'd my verdure"; the my being probably repeated by mistake from the preceding line.

P. 53. Like one
Who having unto truth, by falsing of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To credit his own lie.—The old copies read "having into truth, by telling of it." This reading, with unto substituted for into, is commonly explained by making it refer to lie in the second line after. But is this, or was it ever, a legitimate English construction? Collier's second folio substitutes to untruth for into truth; rather plausibly, at first sight. But the meaning in that case would be, "having made his memory a sinner to untruth by lying”; whereas the sense required clearly is, “having made his memory a sinner unto truth by lying.” This sense is aptly expressed by falsing, as, I think, every one will see. Nor does it seem to me at all unlikely that tell should have been misprinted for fals; especially as the verb to false was passing out of use before 1623. The quotations given in foot-note 27 appear to yield the present reading ample support; but, as several eminent Shake-spearians with whom I have corresponded object to it, I here add a few others. So in The Faerie Queene, i. 9, 46: —

Is not enough, that to this Lady mild
Thou falsèd hast thy faith with perjuree?

Also, in the same, ii. 5, 9: —

Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him strayt,
And falsèd oft his blowes t' illude him with such bayt.

Also, in the Epilogue to The Shepheards Calendar: —

To teach the ruder shepheard how to feede his sheepe,
And from the falsers fraud his folded flocke to keepe.

Also, in Daniel’s Complaint of Rosamond: —

Such one was I, my beauty was mine own;
No borrow’d blush, which bankrupt beauties seek,
That new-found shame, a sin to us unknown,—
Th' adulterate beauty of a falsèd cheek.

As to the other change, unto for into, it appears that these two forms were often used indiscriminately; at all events, the old editions often have into.where our present idiom absolutely requires unto. So in Cymbeline, i. 6: “Such a holy witch, that he enchanteth societies into him.” And, as an instance of the converse, in A Midsummer-Night’s Dream, i. 1, the quartos read, “That he hath turn’d a heaven unto a hell”; while the folio has “a heaven into a hell.”

But the Rev. Mr. Arrowsmith has lately proposed an ingenious application of the old text, which seems to call for some notice. He thinks the right construction to be, “by telling of it into truth.” And he quotes several instances of like expression; as the following from South’s Sermons: “Till he has thought a distasteful apprehension into an action of murder.” And again: “Yet vice cannot be praised into virtue.” This form of speech is not indeed uncommon, and it has long been familiar to me; but I cannot think the cases parallel. In that construction of the passage the pronoun it must refer to some antecedent, and cannot be used absolutely, as it well may be in the reading here given; yet there is nothing for it to refer to, at least nothing but lie, in the second line after, which is, I think, inadmissible, for the reason already stated. Moreover, the sense of telling a lie into truth seems to me quite unsuited to the place. In short, this explanation is so strained and far-fetched, that it only operates with me as a further argument against the old text.

P. 54. To have no screen between this part he play'd
And them he play'd it for, he needs will be
Absolute Milan.—The original reads “And him he play’d it for.” The correction is Mr. P. A. Daniel’s, and seems to me eminently judicious. I never could make any sense out of the old text. See foot-note 31.

P. 55. Mira. I should sin
To think but nobly of my grandmother.
Pros. Good wombs have borne bad sons.—In the old text, the last line is made a part of Miranda’s speech. Theobald thought it should be as here given, and so Hanmer printed it.

P. 55. One midnight
Fated to th' practice did Antonio open
The gates of Milan; and, i' the dead of darkness,
The ministers for th' purpose hurried thence
Me and thy crying self.—The original has “Fated to th' purpose.” The change is from Collier’s second folio, and is admitted on the ground that purpose may have got repeated by mistake from the second line after. Staunton thinks it “an improvement,” and Dyce adopts it. Still I do not feel quite sure about it.

P. 55. I, not remembering how I cried on't then,
Will cry it o'er again.—The original has “how I cried out then”; which gives nothing for it, in the next line, to refer to. Lettsom would read “how I cried it then.”
P. 56.  Dear, they durst not—
So dear the love my people bore me—set
A mark so bloody on the business.—The original has “nor set A marke.” The nor both spoils the metre, and, to say the least, hurts the sense. The omission was proposed by Mr. William Aldis Wright.

P. 56.  Where they prepared
A rotten carcass of a boat, not rigg’d,
Nor tackle, sail, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively had quit it.—The original has butt instead of boat, and, in the last line, have instead of had.

P. 56.  Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from Heaven,
When I have degg’d the sea with drops full salt.—The original reads “When I have deck’d the sea.” The word deck’d has given the editors a deal of trouble; and no wonder, for neither of its admitted senses at all suits the context. Dyce, I think, was the first to suggest that it might be “a corruption of the provincialism degg’d, that is, sprinkled.” See foot-note 44.

P. 57.  Some food we had, and some fresh water, that
A noble Neapolitan, Gonzalo,
Out of his charity,—being then appointed
Master of this design,—did give us.—The original has “who being then appointed.” The pronoun who upsets both grammar and metre, and also obscures the sense. Pope omits it.

P. 59.  Jove’s lightnings, the precursors
O’ the dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
And sight-outrunning were not: the fire, and cracks
Of sulphurous roaring, the most mighty Neptune
Seem’d to besiege, &c.—The original has lightning for lightnings, and “Seeme to besiege.”

P. 60.  On their unstaining garments not a blemish,
But fresher than before.—The old text has “on their susta-ining garments”; which cannot well be explained to any fitting sense.
Probably the Poet's language was sophisticated by the transcriber or the printer, not understanding the old indiscriminate use of active and passive forms. Since the change was made, I learn that Mr. Speeding had conjectured the same reading. See foot-note 59.

P. 62. Pros. What is the time o' the day?
Ariel. Past the mid season,
At least two glasses.
Pros. The time 'twixt six and now
Must by us both be spent most preciously.—The old copies print "At least two glasses" as a part of Prospero's next speech. Corrected by Warburton.

P. 62. Told thee no lies, made no mistakings.—The original has "made thee no mistakings"; where thee spoils the verse without helping the sense. Doubtless an accidental repetition from the preceding clause.

P. 63. For one thing she had,
They would not take her life.—The original reads "For one thing she did." This is, to say the least, very obscure, and there is nothing in the play that throws any light upon it. The reading in the text is explained by what Prospero says in his next speech: "This blue-eyed hag was hither brought with child," &c. The correction was proposed to me by Mr. Joseph Crosby.

P. 64. Go make thyself like to a nymph o' the sea:
Be subject to no sight but mine.—The original reads, "most ridiculously," says Dyce, "no sight but thine and mine." It also omits to after like. Supplied in the second folio.

P. 65. Go take this shape,
And hither come in't: hence with diligence!—So Hanmer. The original repeats go before hence, thus spoiling the metre to no purpose.

P. 65. Come forth, I say! there's other business for thee:
Come forth, thou tortoise!—The original omits the second forth. Both sense and metre evidently require it to be repeated along with Come. Inserted by Steevens.
P. 65. As wicked dew as e'er my mother brush'd
With raven's feather from unwholesome fen. — Upon this Dyce notes as follows: “Though wicked, as an epithet of dew, makes very good sense, (meaning baleful,) I suspect that it is not Shakespeare's word, and that it has been repeated by mistake from the line just above.” Perhaps the Poet wrote cursed.

P. 66.
A south-west blow on ye,
And blister you all o'er. — Ought it not to be “A south-west wind blow on ye”? It seems to me that both sense and metre call for wind. And where two or more consecutive words begin with the same or similar letters, one is very apt to drop out.

P. 66.
When thou camest here first,
Thou strokedst me and madest much of me. — The old text is without here. Ritson thought the word ought to be supplied; and Walker says, “‘camest here first,’ surely.”

P. 68.
Therefore wast thou
Deservedly confined into this rock,
Who hadst deserved more than a prison. — I suspect, with Walker, that deservedly crept into the text from some other hand than Shakespeare's. Walker observes that “the nine-syllable line is alien to Shakespeare,” and proposes to print as follows, adding, “Note the difference of the flow”:

Therefore wast thou
Confined into this rock, who hadst deserved
More than a prison.

P. 69.
Curtsied when you have, and kiss'd
The wild waves whist,
Foot it featly here and there. — So printed in the original. Dyce, with most of the modern editors, makes the second line parenthetical, thus:

Curtsied when you have and kiss'd, —
The wild waves whist, — &c.

This of course means “the wild waves being whist.” Whist, I suppose, means still or calm; and how the waves could be wild and calm at the same time, does not well appear. Besides, Dyce's mode of printing, it seems to me, expunges a delicate touch of poetry that is well worth keeping. See foot-note 89.

P. 69. Hark, hark! the watch-dogs bark, &c.—I here adopt the reading and arrangement proposed by Mr. P. A. Daniel; which, I think, fairly extricate the latter part of Ariel's song from all difficulty. In the original it stands thus:

Foote it featly heere, and there, and sweete Sprights beare the burthen. Burthen dispersedly.
Harke, harke, bowgh wawgh : the watch-Dogges barke, bowgh-wawgh.
Ar. Hark, hark, I heare, the straine of strutting Chanticlere cry cockadiddle-dowe.

Mr. Daniel comments upon the matter as follows: "Every reader will, I think, accept Pope's alteration of beare the burthen to the burthen beare; but there seems to be a diversity of opinion as to what that burthen is. Some editors only give bowgh-wawgh, bowgh-wawgh, as the burthen; others the whole line, Harke, harke, bowgh-wawgh : the watch-dogges barke, bowgh-wawgh; and all give cry cockadiddle-dowe as part of Ariel's song. Cry seems to me to be merely a stage-direction. The burthen heard dispersedly is the barking of dogs and the crowing of cocks."

P. 73. What, I say,
My fool my tutor? — The original has foot instead of fool. Walker says, "Read fool," and quotes from Beaumont and Fletcher's Pilgrim, iv. 1:

When fools and mad-folks shall be tutors to me,
And feel my sores, yet I unsensible, &c.

P. 74. My father's loss, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends, and this man's threats
To whom I am subdued, are light to me. — The original reads "nor this man's threats," and "are but light to me"; of which the one plainly upsets the sense, and the other the metre.
ACT II., SCENE I.

P. 76. I pr'ythee spare me. — So Walker. The original lacks me.

P. 77. Adri. Though this island seem to be desert, —
   Sebas. Ha, ha, ha! — So, you're paid.
   Adri. — uninhabitable, &c. — The original prints the second line as two speeches, and assigns the latter part, "So, you're paid," to Antonio. Mr. White changes you're paid to you've paid. The correction in the text is Theobald's. See foot-note 5.

P. 79. Alon. Ah! — The original has "Gon." instead of "Alon." The correction is Staunton's; who notes, "this exclamation belongs to Alonso, who is awakened from his trance of grief."

P. 81. And the fair soul herself
   Weigh'd, between loathness and obedience, at
   Which end the beam should bow. — The original reads "at Which end o' the beam should bow." Modern editions generally change should to she'd; but it seems to me much better to erase o', and thus make beam the subject of should bow. Pope's correction.

P. 83. Sebas. God save his Majesty!
   Anto. Long live Gonzalo! — So Walker. The original omits God, which was probably stricken out by the Master of the Revels in obedience to the well-known statute against profanity. In such matters, the Poet's judgment seems preferable to an Act of Parliament. The folio has many instances of such omission, where the quartos which were printed before the passing of the Act in question give the text as Shakespeare undoubtedly wrote it.

P. 84. Will you laugh me asleep? for I am very heavy.
   Anto. Go sleep, and hear us not. — The original is without not. There appears no assignable reason of wit why the Poet should have left it out, and all other reasons certainly require it. Keightly's correction.
P. 87. Ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond,—

But doubt discovery there.—Here Capell substitutes doubts for doubt, but, as it seems to me, without at all relieving the obscurity. Hanmer reads "But drops discovery there." This is more intelligible, but still unsatisfactory. The passage has long been a poser to me, as I have met with no sufficient explanation of it. Possibly we ought to read "Nor aught discover there." See foot-note 42.

P. 87. She that is Queen of Tunis; she that dwells
Ten leagues beyond man's life; she that from Naples
Can have no note, unless the Sun were post,—
The Man-i'-the-moon's too slow,—till new-born chins
Be rough and razonable. She 'twas for whom we
All were sea-swallow'd, though some cast again;
And, by that destiny, to perform an act, &c.—In the old text, the fifth of these lines stands precisely thus: "Be rough, and Razor-able: She that from whom." The modern text is, "Be rough and razonable; she that from whom," or "she from whom," or "she from whom coming." But these readings all seem to me to miss the essential point; for they proceed upon the supposal that what comes after razonable is in the same construction with what precedes; which appears quite at odds with the proper logic of the passage, and also with the right Shakespearian rhythm of thought and expression. And the old text rather looks as if a full stop were intended at razonable, and a new construction there to begin. On the other hand, however, in the old "She that from whom," that must needs be taken as a relative pronoun, just as it is in the preceding clauses. Now "she that from whom" is not English, and, I am sure, never was; for it is the same as "she who from whom," which is absurd. At one time I thought of reading "She's that from whom," which makes that a demonstrative pronoun, and thus removes the absurdity aforesaid. But it seems to me better to substitute 'twas, and so get rid of that altogether. Nor is the change at all violent. And my theory is, that "she that from" got repeated by a sort of contagion from the third line above. As to the change of from into for, perhaps it is not strictly necessary, as from may possibly yield the same meaning. At all events, for whom legitimately carries the sense of on whose account, or, because of whom. For is often used thus.—In the old text, again, the pronoun we stands at the beginning of the sixth line, instead of at the end of the fifth. This change is made because, in the old arrangement, the proper rhythm of the sixth is spoiled, it being against all Shakespearian rules to set an extra syllable at the beginning of a verse; whereas nothing is more common than such syllables at the end. See foot-note 45.
CRITICAL NOTES.

P. 88. _A space whose every cubit_

_Seems to cry out, “How shalt thou, Claribel,_

_Measure us back to Naples? Keep in Tunis,_

_And let Sebastian wake!”_ — The original reads “How shall that Claribel Measure,” &c. The reading here given is Hanmer’s. I am surprised that it has not been more generally accepted; for the continuation of the speech, “Keep in Tunis,” &c., is clearly an apostrophe to Claribel, and was no doubt meant to be in the same construction.

P. 89. _Sebas. But, for your conscience —_

_Anto. Ay, sir; and where lies that? if ’twere a hibe,_

_’Twould put me to my slipper._ — The original is without and in the second of these lines. Inserted by Dyce.

P. 89. _Here lies your brother,_

_No better than the earth he lies upon,_

_If he were that which now he’s like; whom I,_

_With this obedient steel, three inches of it,_

_Can lay to bed for ever._ — In the third of these lines, the original has that’s dead after “now he’s like,” and transfers whom I to the beginning of the next line. Steevens made the following just note upon the passage: “The words that’s dead (as Dr. Farmer observes to me) are evidently a gloss, or marginal note, which has found its way into the text. Such a supplement is useless to the speaker’s meaning, and the next verse becomes redundant by its insertion.”

P. 90. _My master through his art foresees the danger_

_That you, his friend, are in; and sends me forth —_

_For else his project dies — to keep thee living._ — The original reads “to keepe them living.” Some editors change project to projects, and thus make an antecedent for them; but Dyce’s correction is unquestionably right.
P. 90. Gon. [Waking.] Now, good angels
Preserve the King! — [To Sebas. and Anto.] Why, how now! —
[To Alon.] Ho, awake!
[To Sebas. and Anto.] Why are you drawn? wherefore this gastly looking?
Alon. [Waking.] What's the matter? — I here give the arrangement which Dyce adopted and improved from Stau. The old text makes a strange muddle of the passage, thus: —

Gon. Now, good Angels preserve the King.
Alon. Why how now hoa; awake? why are you drawn?
Wherefore this ghastly looking?
Gon. What's the matter?

P. 91. I saw their weapons drawn: there was a noise, That's verity. — Instead of verity, the original has verily. Corrected by Pope,

ACT II., SCENE II.

P. 96. Here; swear, man, how thou escapedst. — The old text reads
"swere then how thou escap'dst." This makes the speech addressed to Caliban, whereas the context clearly requires it to be addressed to Trinculo. Several ways of printing have been proposed, in order to get over the difficulty; but they only remove one difficulty to draw on another. Probably the transcriber or compositor supposed the speech addressed to Caliban, and sophisticated it into logical harmony with that idea, by changing man into then.

P. 98. And sometimes I'll get thee
Young staniels from the rock. — Instead of staniels, the original has scamels, which has drawn forth a deal of commentary. The correction is Dyce's, from whose remarks on the passage I condense the following: "Here scamels has been explained as the diminutive of scams, and as meaning limpets. But I have little or no doubt that it is a misprint: for who gathers young limpets? and besides, the words from the rock would seem to be equivalent to from the cliffs. Theobald substituted shamois, and also proposed sea-malls or sea-mells, and stannels or staniels. In the first place, staniels comes very near the trace of the old letters. Secondly, staniel accords well with the context, 'from the rock'; for, as Montagu's Ornithological Dictionary tells us, the 'Kestrel, Stannel, or Windhover, is one of our most common species of hawks, especially in the more rocky situations and high cliffs on our coasts, where they breed.' Thirdly, in another passage of Shakespeare, where nobody doubts that the genuine reading is staniel, all the old editions exhibit the gross misprint, stallion: 'And with what wing the stallion checks at it!' Twelfth Night, ii. 5.'

P. 98. Nor scrape trencher, nor wash dish.—The original has trenchering; "which," says Dyce, "is undoubtedly an error of the transcriber or compositor, occasioned by the preceding words firing and requiring:" Pope's correction.

ACT III., SCENE I.

P. 99. This my mean task would be

As heavy to me as 'tis odious, but

The mistress, &c.—The original lacks 'tis, which was inserted by Pope; and rightly, beyond question.

P. 99. But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my labour;

Most busy when I do it least.—The original has labours instead of labour, and also reads "Most busie lest, when I doe it." The second folio changes lest to least. But the two forms were often used indifferently, and either form was used in both the senses of our present words lest and least. Modern editions generally print labour instead of labours, so as to harmonize with it in the next line. Few passages in Shakespeare have been more fruitful of comment and controversy than this. The list of changes made or proposed is quite too long for reproduction here. With the old reading it is uncertain what most busy refers to or is the predicate of; that is to say, whether the meaning be "I being most busy," or "these sweet thoughts being most busy." For the latter sense the best reading I have met with is "most busiest," proposed by Holt White, and adopted by Singer and Grant White. But had this been the Poet's thought he would probably have written "Most busy they, when I do it." Dyce prints, with Theobald, "Most busielse," which, of course, makes the phrase refer to the speaker himself; but the reading is to me quite unsatisfactory. On the whole, it seems much better to connect least or least with what follows, and not with what precedes. It is worth noting, also, that the old reading throws the ictus on I and it, whereas it ought, apparently, to fall on when and do. Hardly any corruptions are more frequent in Shakespeare than those resulting from misplacement of words, and even of whole lines. Many are the cases where similar transpositions have to be made. In this case we might read "Most busy, least when I do it"; but this gives us a very awkward inversion, and both sense and rhythm come much better by transposing least to the end. But I suspect, after all, that the Poet first wrote most busie, then interlined least or least as a correction, and that the two got printed together; so that we ought to read "Least busy when I do it." And so Pope reads.—Perhaps I ought to add that Mr. A. E. Brae proposes to read "my labour's most busy hest"; hest being taken in the sense of task or exaction. With this reading, as the proposer observes, "an object is given to the possessive s in labour's, and an antecedent provided for the pronoun it in the last line."

But this reading, I think, would make the passage rather too tame. See foot-note 2.

P. 103. So glad of this as they I cannot be,

Who am surprised withal.—The old text reads "Who are surprised with all." Theobald changed with all to withal, and rightly, beyond question. The same misprint occurs frequently, as Walker has shown. And so are is, I have no doubt, a misprint for am. Prospero is himself surprised, as indeed he well may be, that his wish has been crowned so far beyond his expectations; and it is most natural that he should be expressing that surprise: but the lovers, I take it, are not at all surprised at what has sprung up in their hearts; it seems to them the most natural thing in the world.

ACT III., SCENE II.

P. 105. Wilt thou be pleased

To hearken once again the suit I made thee?—The original prints this speech as prose, and reads "to hearken once again to the suit I made to thee." Caliban everywhere else, I believe, except in his next speech, uses verse: it seems indeed one of his leading characteristics to do so. Dyce thinks the present speech should be printed as in the text.

P. 107. He has brave utensils,—for so he calls them,—
Which, when he has a house, he'll deck't withal.—So Hanmer and Walker. The original, decke for deck't.

P. 108. I ne'er saw woman,
But only Sycorax my dam and she.—The original reads "I never saw a woman." Corrected by Pope.

P. 109. Cal. The sound is going away; let's follow it,
And after do our work.—The old copies assign this speech to Trinculo. The correction is Mr. P. A. Daniel's, who justly observes that "Stephano replies to it, 'Lead, monster; we'll follow.'"

P. 110. Steph. I would I could see this taborer! he lays it on.—
Wilt come?
Trin. I'll follow, Stephano.—Such is clearly the right distribution, as Ritson observes. The old copies make Wilt come the beginning of Trinculo's speech.

ACT III., SCENE III.

P. 113. Each putter-out of one for five.—The original inverts the order here, of five for one; which can hardly be made to yield the right sense. The correction is Thirlby's. See foot-note 12.

P. 114. The never-surfeited sea
Hath caused to belch up; yea, and on this island,
Where man doth not inhabit.—The original reads "to belch up you." But the object of belch up is expressed in whom, fourth line above; the regular construction being, "You are three men of sin, whom Destiny hath caused the never-surfeited sea to belch up." So that you coming in after belch up is, to say the least, extremely awkward. And, as we have you again in the next line, right under yea, the misprint, if it be one, is easily accounted for. The correction is Staunton's.
Their great guilt,
Like poison given to work a long time after. — The original reads "work a great time after." — The change is Walker's, who supposes great to have been repeated by mistake from the preceding line.

ACT IV., SCENE I.

As I hope
For quiet days, fair issue, and long life,
With love such 'tis now, the murkiest even,
The most opportune place, the strongest suggestion
Our worser genius can, &c. — The old text has "the murkiest den." The reading even or e'en for den was proposed by "C. T." in Notes and Queries, July 25, 1874. The natural logic of the passage plainly requires some word denoting time; as the speaker is apparently supposing a concurrence of the several inducements of time, place, and inclination. Besides, the sense of "murkiest den" is better expressed in "most opportune place." The misprint of d for e occurs, I think, oftener than any other.

Which spongy April at thy best betrims,
To make cold nymphs chaste crowns. — The first of these lines has proved, with one exception, more fruitful of comment and controversy than any other passage in the play. Those who retain the old reading commonly explain peoned or pioned as meaning dug, and twilled as meaning ridged, or made into ridges, — a sense which it bears in reference to some kinds of cloth. But the words so explained will nowise cohere with the purpose assigned, "to make cold nymphs chaste crowns." Others understand peoned as referring to the well-known flower called peony, and change twilled to liliated. This gives a meaning in harmony with the context indeed, but hardly consistent with fact: for, though it appears from Bacon's essay Of Gardens that peonies and lilies bloomed in April, it nowhere appears that those flowers bloomed, or even grew, in such places as the brims of rivers. In fact, the peony, as it is known to us, is not a wild flower, does not grow in marshy grounds, and has no connection with river-banks. The difficulty, I think, is fairly cleared up by The Edinburgh Review for October, 1872. The learned writer has the following: "We could not but believe that there must be some flower, most probably a water-flower, or one living on marshy ground, that was provincially known as a peony. In confirmation of this view, we were informed by a clergyman who was for many years incumbent of a parish in the county, that peony is the name given in Warwickshire to the marsh-marigold. On a little reflection it was not difficult to see why the name of the peony should have been transferred to the marsh-marigold. In their early stages, when the peculiar state of the bud naturally attracts attention, the peony and marsh-marigold are alike, not only in growth and form, but in colour also. The marsh-marigold haunts the watery margins as the constant associate of reeds and rushes, blooms in 'spongy April,' and, in common with other water flowers, is twined with sedge 'to make cold nymphs chaste crowns.'" The writer also quotes from Mrs. Loudon's description of the flower: "This is one of the most showy of the British plants, and it is also one of the most common, as there are few ponds or slow rivers in Great Britain that have not some of these plants growing on their banks in April and May." In regard to twilled also, the same writer shows that twills was an old provincial name for reeds and certain species of sedge. "The word is indeed," says he, "still retained in its secondary application, being commercially used to denote the fluted or rib-like effect produced on various fabrics by a kind of ridged or carded weaving. Twilled is, therefore, the very word to describe the crowded sedges in the shallower reaches of the Avon as it winds around Stratford." On the whole, then, I am satisfied that the old reading must stand; though, without the foregoing explanation, I was never able to see any sense in it. See foot-note 14.

P. 120.

And thy brown groves,
Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves. — So Hanmer and Collier's second folio. The original has "thy broom groves." Milton uses brown repeatedly in the same way. So in Paradise Lost, ix. 1088: "Where highest woods spread their umbrage broad and brown at evening." The change in the text is strongly opposed by some. I can well understand why a grove should be called brown, but not how a growth of broom should be called a grove; the broom, or genista, being, as Nares observes, a mere shrub, which gives no shade. In support, however, of the old reading, it is said that one kind of broom grows to the height of a tall man. So do some species of corn; yet who would speak of a grove of corn? Lettsom comments as follows: "The notion of disconsolate lovers betaking themselves to groves is common enough in poetry: Shakespeare himself has placed Romeo in a sycamore grove when Rosaline was cruel; and we may judge from this the sort of grove he would select for a young gentleman in like case. Till it can be shown that a growth of broom may be called a grove, it seems idle to dispute about the height of the shrub. In Babington's Botany it is said to be two and a half or three feet high; and this is certainly the usual height to which it grows on Hampstead Heath, though occasionally a plant may be found taller: I am told that in Italy it grows to the height of six or seven feet; but that surely is no great matter. The defences set up for the old reading appear to me singularly weak."

I must add that, in the first scene of the play, we have an instance of broom evidently misprinted brown in the original; and I do not see why brown might not as easily have been misprinted broom. See note on the passage, page 149.

P. 122. Earth's increase, and foison plenty.—So the second folio: the first omits and. The prefix "Cer." also wanting in the original.

P. 123. So rare a wonder'd father and a wife
Make this place Paradise.—The original has wise for wife and makes for make. The old reading has been stoutly maintained; but I can hardly think that Ferdinand would leave the wife out of such a reckoning, especially the wife being Miranda, or the Wonderful. Then too wise and Paradise make a disagreeable jingle. See foot-note 25.

P. 123. You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the winding brooks,
With your sedge crowns and ever-harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer our summons; Juno does command.—In the first of these lines, the original has windring, which Rowe corrected to winding. Some editors read wandering. In the second line, the original has "sedge'd crowns." The reading in the text is Walker's, and is also found in Collier's second folio. It appears that final d and final e were especially apt to be confounded. In the fourth line, the old text has your instead of our. Probably repeated by mistake from the line before.

P. 124. This is most strange: your father's in some passion
That works him strongly.—So Hanmer and Dyce. The original lacks most, which certainly helps the sense, and finishes the verse; still I am not quite sure about it.

P. 124. You do, my son, look in a movéd sort.—The original reads “You do look, my son,” &c. The reading in the text was proposed by Seymour.

P. 125. And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind.—So the old editions. Dyce and some others print wreck instead of rack; and Dyce produces several instances where the form rack is clearly used for wreck. But I think the sense of rack harmonizes best with the context. Thus the expressions, “Melted into thin air,” “the baseless fabric of this vision,” “shall dissolve,” and “this insubstantial pageant faded,” naturally draw into the sense of something thinner and more vapoury than is fairly expressed by the word wreck. See foot-note 32.

P. 125. Ferd. Mira. We wish you peace.
Pros. [To Ariel.] Come with a thought!—I thank ye.
[Exeunt Ferd. and Mira.]—Ariel, come!—The original has “wish your peace,” and “I thank thee Ariel: come.” The first correction is Walker's, the other Dyce's; and both seem eminently judicious. See foot-note 34.

P. 126. Well, say again, where didst thou leave these varlets?—The original lacks Well.

P. 127. On whom my pains,
Humanely taken, all are lost, quite lost.—So Walker. The original has “all, all lost.” Hanmer reads “are all lost.”
P. 128. Nay, good my lord, give me thy favour still. — The original lacks Nay, and thus defeats Caliban of his wonted rhythm.

P. 129. Let's along,
And do the murder first. — The original has “Let's alone.” The correction is Theobald’s, and I think it needs no defence.

ACT V., SCENE I.

P. 132. In the same fashion as you gave in charge;
Just as you left them; all are prisoners, sir,
In the line-grove, &c. — In the second of these lines, the old text reads “all prisoners, sir.” The Poet could hardly have been so indifferent to rhythm as to leave such a gap. Pope reads “all your prisoners.” The reading in the text is from Collier’s second folio.

P. 132. And the remainder mourning over them,
Brimful of sorrow and dismay; but chiefly
He that you term’d “The good old lord, Gonzalo”:
His tears run down his beard, like winter-drops
From eaves of reeds. — In the third of these lines, the original has Him for He, and inserts sir after term’d, to the manifest spoiling of the metre. — In the fourth line, again, the old text has “winters drops.” Corrected in the fourth folio.

P. 134. And 'twixt the green sea and the azure vault
Set roaring war. — The original has “azur’d vault.” See note on “With your sedge crowns,” page 166.

P. 135. A solemn air, as the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure the brains,
Now useless, boil'd within the skull! — In the first of these lines, the old text has and instead of as. But the latter is clearly required; for Prospero certainly means that “a solemn air” is itself “the best comforter.” Shakespeare is almost classical in his estimate of the power of music; and here he probably had in mind the effect of David's harp and voice in charming the evil spirit out of King Saul.
CRITICAL NOTES.

See 1 Samuel, xvi. 23.—In the second and third lines, again, the original has "cure thy brains," and "within thy skull." But Prospero is evidently speaking either to all six of the men or else to none of them. If he is speaking to them, it should be your—your; if merely in reference to them, it should be either the—the or their—their. The correction is Dr. C. M. Ingleby’s, and is manifestly right; though, for my part, I should prefer their—their, but that it involves more of literal change. The old copies have many clear instances of like error.—The original also has boile instead of boil’d, which the sense naturally requires. Probably the Poet wrote boil’d; and here, as in many other cases, final d and final e were confounded. See foot-note 10.

P. 135. O thou good Gonzalo,
My true preserver, &c.—So Walker. The original lacks thou, and so has an ugly gap in the verse. "O my good Gonzalo" is the reading of some editors.

P. 136. In a cowslip’s bell I lie,—
There I couch: when owls do cry,
On the bat’s back I do fly
After Summer merrily.—In the second of these lines, I adopt the punctuation proposed by Heath. The original reads "There I couch when owls do cry." Heath notes as follows: "If Ariel ‘couches in the cowslip’s bell when owls do cry,’ it follows that he couches there in Winter; for that, as Mr. Warburton hath shown, from the authority of our Poet himself, as well as from the general notoriety of the fact, is the season when owls do cry. How, then, can it consistently be said, as it is in the words immediately following, that he constantly flies the approach of Winter, by following the Summer in its progress to other climates?"—In the fourth line, Theobald changed Summer to sunset; plausibly, as it assimilates the meaning to matter of fact. But the Poet ascribes to Ariel and his fellows something of the same qualities which the Fairies have, as delineated in A Midsummer-Night’s Dream. These beings move entirely according to the pleasure and impulse of their inner nature, unlimited by any external order of facts; “wandering everywhere swifter than the moony sphere,” in quest of whatever they have most delight in, or most affinity with. Oberon puts it thus:

Then my Queen, in silence sad,
Trip we after the night's shade;
We the globe can compass soon,
Swifter than the wandering Moon.

P. 137. The master and the boatswain

Being awaked, enforce them to this place.—So Walker conjectured, and so the context clearly requires. The original has awake. Another instance of d and e confounded, the Poet having probably written awkd.

P. 138. But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
I here could pluck his Highness' frown upon you,
And justify you traitors: at this time
I'll tell no tales.
Sebas. [Aside to ANTO.] The Devil speaks in him.
P.

Now,
For you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother, &c.—In the last line but one, the original has No instead of Now. No must of course refer to what Sebastian has just said, "The Devil speaks in him." But this is evidently spoken either to himself or to his partner in guilt; and things so spoken are, I think, never supposed to be heard by the other persons of the scene. Besides, we naturally want the sense of now as a transitional word. The correction was proposed by the late Professor Allen, of Philadelphia.

P. 139. As great to me, as late; and, portable
To make the dear loss, &c.—The original has supportable, which makes shocking work with the metre. Steevens printed portable, which keeps the sense, saves the verse, and is elsewhere used by the Poet.

P. 140. And scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth, these words
Are natural breath.—So Capell. The original has "their words." But Prospero evidently refers to the words himself is speaking. See foot-note 30.
P. 142. Let us not burden our remembrance with
A heaviness that's gone.—The original has remembrances. Corrected by Pope.

P. 143. When we, in all her trim, freshly beheld
Our royal, good, and gallant ship.—The original reads, "Where we, in all our trim.” The last is Thirlby's correction.

P. 145. This mis-shaped knave,
His mother was a witch.—So Pope and Walker. The original has “mis-shapen.”

P. 146. This is as strange a thing as e'er I look'd on.—The original reads "*This is a strange thing as," &c. Corrected by Capell.

P. 147. Where I have hope to see the nuptial
Of these our dear-belov'd solemnized.—The original has “our deere-belov'd solemnized”; which White and Dyce retain. This, it seems to me, is pushing conservatism one letter too far. It is true, the Poet sometimes has it sölemnized; but then he oftener has it as in the text.

P. 148. Now my charms are all o'erthrown, &c.—All Shakespearians, I believe, are pretty much agreed that this Epilogue was not written by Shakespeare. The whole texture and grain of the thing are altogether unlike him. Any one, who will take pains to compare it with the passages of trochaic verse in A Midsummer-Night's Dream, must see at once, I think, that the two could not have come from the same hand. It cannot be affirmed with positiveness who did write the Epilogue. As Mr. White observes, such appendages were very apt to be supplied by some second hand; and in Shakespeare's circle of friends and fellow-dramatists there were more than one who might well have done this office for him, either with or without his consent; especially as his plays are known to have passed out of his hands into the keeping of the theatrical company for which he wrote. Both the Prologue and the Epilogue of King Henry VIII. have been noted by Johnson and others as decidedly wanting in the right Shakespearian taste.

Cushing & Bramhall, Printers, Boston.
For years the study of vernacular authors has been pursued largely on a critical, philological, and biographical basis. During the past few years much uneasiness has been felt with the results thus attained, and the feeling has been gaining ground that this method of instruction is not the best. Learned criticisms about an author do not give to the pupil a knowledge of the matter concerning which the author is writing. He must read freely the best authors, and become not only imbued with their spirit, but also at home with the matter and thought of the writer. See Preface to Hudson's Hamlet for a full discussion of this question.

In furtherance of this plan we have published, in cheap form, pamphlets of the standard authors, and have others in press. We bind both in cloth and paper.

HUDSON'S TEXT-BOOK OF POETRY. From Wordsworth, Coleridge, Burns, Beattie, Goldsmith, and Thomson. With Sketches of the Authors' lives. For use in Schools and Classes. By Prof. II. N. Hudson. 12mo. Cloth. 704 pages . . . . . . . 1.50

Two-thirds of the volume is filled with Wordsworth, who has now made good his position as one of the five great chiefs of English poetry, and whose works embody, in the highest form, whatever is noblest and best in the English poetical literature of the last hundred years. The whole of The Excursion, the first two books of the Prelude, Michael, The Brothers, Tintern Abbey, Laodamia, On the Power of Sound, Ode on Immortality, and a large number of smaller pieces are included. The selections from Coleridge are The Ancient Mariner, Christabel, Fears in Solitude, and eighteen other pieces. From Burns, The Cotter's Saturday Night, The Twa Dogs, Tam O'Shanter, The Vision, and twenty-six other poems, and also twenty-nine of the songs. From Beattie, The Minstrel; from Goldsmith, The Deserted Village; and from Thomson, The Castle of Indolence; these being generally regarded as the best poems of those authors. In all cases, except a few pieces of Wordsworth's, the poems are given entire, as the authors wrote them.
HUDSON'S TEXT-BOOK OF PROSE. From Burke, Webster, and Bacon. With Notes and Sketches of the Authors' Lives. By Prof. H. N. Hudson. 12mo. Cloth. 648 pages . . . . . . $1.50

This work is intended as a sort of companion volume to the preceding. It is made up on the same general principle, the contents being selected with a view to unite, as far as may be, the culture of high and pure literary tastes with the attainment of liberal and useful knowledge. The selections from Burke are Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol, Speech on Economical Reform, Speech to the Electors of Bristol, and A Letter to a Noble Lord, all given entire; also twenty-nine other pieces gathered, as seemed best, from the author's various works. From Webster, Speech in reply to Hayne, Speech on the Presidential Protest, and discourse on The Character of Washington; also thirty-two shorter pieces from other speeches. From Bacon, thirty of the fifty-eight Essays, all given entire, and several choice selections from Advancement of Learning.

HUDSON'S LIFE, ART, AND CHARACTERS OF SHAKESPEARE. Including an Historical Sketch of the Origin and Growth of the Drama in England, with Studies in the Poet's Dramatic Architecture, Delineation of Character, Humor, Style, and Moral Spirit, also with Critical Discourses on the following plays: A Midsummer Night's Dream, The Merchant of Venice, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Much Ado about Nothing, As You Like It, Twelfth Night, All's Well that Ends Well, Measure for Measure, The Tempest, The Winter's Tale, King John, King Richard the Second, King Henry the Fourth, King Henry the Fifth, King Richard the Third, King Henry the Eighth, Romeo and Juliet, Julius Cæsar, Hamlet, Macbeth, King Lear, Antony and Cleopatra, Othello, Cymbeline, and Coriolanus.
